King's Research Portal

DOI:

10.26613/jca/3.1.40

Document Version

Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Link to publication record in King's Research Portal

Citation for published version (APA):

Allington, D. (2020). Antisemitism in the Urban Dictionary and the responsibilities of online publishers. Journal of Contemporary Antisemitism, 3(1), 1-34. <https://doi.org/10.26613/jca/3.1.40>

Citing this paper

Please note that where the full-text provided on King's Research Portal is the Author Accepted Manuscript or Post-Print version this may differ from the final Published version. If citing, it is advised that you check and use the publisher's definitive version for pagination, volume/issue, and date of publication details. And where the final published version is provided on the Research Portal, if citing you are again advised to check the publisher's website for any subsequent corrections.

General rights

Copyright and moral rights for the publications made accessible in the Research Portal are retained by the authors and/or other copyright owners and it is a condition of accessing publications that users recognize and abide by the legal requirements associated with these rights.

- Users may download and print one copy of any publication from the Research Portal for the purpose of private study or research.
- You may not further distribute the material or use it for any profit-making activity or commercial gain
- You may freely distribute the URL identifying the publication in the Research Portal

Take down policy

If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact librarypure@kcl.ac.uk providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

Antisemitism in the Urban Dictionary and the Responsibilities of Online Publishers

Daniel Allington

Abstract

This article focuses on antisemitic and racist content in the Urban Dictionary: a global top-1000 website built upon user-generated content. It argues that the Urban Dictionary's founding principles have directly facilitated the site's exploitation as a platform for the dissemination of antisemitic hate speech and white supremacist ideology. These principles can be seen as typifying the free speech absolutism that became dominant within the US tech industry during the 1990s. However, the right to free expression cannot reasonably be taken to exempt internet companies from responsibility for content whose publication they facilitate. The article concludes by arguing that websites such as the Urban Dictionary are essentially publishers, and that the solution to the problem of their indulgence of bigots may be for those who do not wish to be associated with bigotry to refrain from doing business with institutions that publish content that they consider abhorrent.

Keywords alt-right, antizionism, brand contamination, definitions, dictionaries, free speech, Urban Dictionary, user-generated content, Web 2.0

INTRODUCTION

By defining and modelling correct and/or appropriate usage for the words of a language, lexicographers can exercise a subtle influence on those who use them. Tom Dickens explains their particular role as follows:

Much of the “ideological” content of a dictionary resides in the detail. Dictionaries may not offer the scope of a textbook or a political pamphlet to re-interpret past and present realities, but, unlike other publications, they are a constant source of reference and users tend to trust them implicitly.¹

Such trust may be diminished when a dictionary does not have authoritative status. However, in the online world, non-authoritative but open-access texts may be a far more constant source of reference, as they are easily and almost instantly available at all times. This article focuses on the ways in which multiple definitions and examples within the Urban Dictionary—a slang dictionary featuring user-generated content—appear to have been constructed in order to communicate and normalize an antisemitic and white supremacist worldview.

Identifying Antisemitism

When antisemites speak plainly, their bigotry is readily apparent. However, much antisemitic discourse is expressed in subtle and coded ways, especially online.² In identifying examples of antisemitism, this article therefore draws on the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance Working Definition of Antisemitism (henceforth, the IHRA Definition), which both recognizes antisemitism as a “perception”—that is, as cognitive or ideational in character, and thus not limited to behavioural or emotional hostility—and recognizes that this perception may be inherent in certain ways of thinking about Israel no less than in classic antisemitic tropes.³ This is an acknowledgement of what has been called “the new antisemitism” or “antizionist antisemitism”: what might more straightforwardly be referred to as ‘Israel-related antisemitism.’⁴

Three Lexicographic Forms of Bigotry

Alongside the above, this article employs a novel three-part typology of means by which it is assumed that bigotry can be expressed or communicated through dictionary definitions and examples. These means are as follows:

Type I: definitions and usage examples for hateful slurs, which do not make clear that usage of the slurs is unacceptable, or which argue that their unacceptability is to be regretted. Contemporary lexicographers are very much aware of this form of bigotry. For example, in 1998 Merriam-Webster responded to criticism by revising its definition of “nigger” as “a black person” or “a member of any dark-skinned race” to begin with a warning that would leave readers “in no doubt that the word offends most people.”⁵

Type II: definitions and usage examples for terms denoting specific groups that make sense only given a bigoted and stereotypical understanding of those groups. A good example of this is the use of the word “jew” as a verb meaning “haggle”—this behaviour being a stereotypical attribute of Jews. It was not until 2019 that the Association of British Scrabble Players removed that definition from its official dictionary, following lobbying from the Community Security Trust.⁶

Type III: definitions and usage examples intentionally designed to encode bigoted understandings of the world. Examples can be found in the Nazi-era Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, multiple entries within which appear to have been written in order to justify twentieth century antisemitic views.⁷

Although Type I lexicographic bigotry is, thanks to twenty-first-century preoccupation with verbal hygiene, perhaps the most easily recognized, types II and III are arguably more dangerous, as they perpetuate understandings of the world that can serve as a motivation or justification for persecution and violence. In the body of this article, all three types shall be used as a framework for understanding bigotry as expressed in dictionary definitions published on a single popular website.

The Urban Dictionary

Founded in 1999 and operating out of the United States, the Urban Dictionary is a well-established Web 2.0 site, predating Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, and even Wikipedia. According to the web traffic analytics service, Alexa Internet, Urban Dictionary falls comfortably within the world’s top 1000 internet sites, ranging between 640th and 757th place from September to December 2019, and receiving incoming links from more sites than the average for what that particular service regards as its four main competitors, that is, Merriam Webster (which ranged between 599th and 515th place in the world rankings during the same period), dictionary.com (which ranged between 847th and 634th), the Free Dictionary (between 635th and 688th), and the Cambridge University Press website (337th and 334th).⁸ At the time of writing, the Wikipedia page for Urban Dictionary cites numerous indicators of the site’s influence, including its official use as a legal resource.⁹ It can further be observed that Google searches for current examples of internet slang often place the Urban Dictionary very highly. For example, the Urban Dictionary page for “chonky”—an affectionate word used to describe overweight animals—was placed first in the Google rankings as of the time of writing, when browsing privately from the United Kingdom.¹⁰

There appears to have been only a single scholarly attempt to theorize the Urban Dictionary. Caroline Tagg writes as follows:

Its purpose is to document slang usage as defined by its users, and it accepts multiple and contrasting definitions of the same word. It also accepts neologisms invented for the purpose of entering them into the dictionary. These often serve to document or highlight existing concepts or practices. . . .

As [Urban Dictionary's] founder, Aaron Peckham puts it, "Every single word on here is written by someone with a point of view, with a personal experience of the word in the entry". The contrast between Wikipedia and Urban Dictionary is similar to that between [wikis] and blogs, which Myers has theorised in terms of competing models of knowledge. According to [the] "public" model [of wikis], knowledge is a group endeavour: "anyone can contribute, but . . . only with the agreement of others can one's contribution stand". But in the "private" model of the blogosphere, knowledge is an individual possession: "everyone is entitled to say what they want" and "everyone has the right to be heard". As Peckham's statement would suggest, these assumptions also underpin Urban Dictionary.¹¹

As we shall see, such allowances appear to be extended to antisemites and other bigots, who are permitted not only to express hateful views, but also to convey those views to an audience through the online publishing platform that the Urban Dictionary provides. As a result, numerous Urban Dictionary entries express a hateful point of view and encode a bigoted understanding of the world. It seems likely that this results from the deliberate activity of digitally-active white supremacists (now sometimes referred to as the "alt-right"), whose use of the internet for outreach has been a cause for concern since the late twentieth century.¹²

ANTISEMITISM AS MANIFEST IN URBAN DICTIONARY DEFINITIONS AND EXAMPLES

Type I

It is possible to locate many entries for racial, ethnic, religious, and sexual slurs on the Urban Dictionary. This in itself is not necessarily a bad thing. Whether a dictionary entry should be considered bigoted depends not on the word being defined but on the precise form of the definition and examples.

The top entry for the word "kike" appropriately defines the word as "[a] racist name for a Jewish person," while the second identifies it as a "racial slur" and the third as "a degrading way of calling someone a Jew"; the fifth and sixth were similar. However, several highly placed definitions of the word appear to have been constructed in order to suggest that its use should not be regarded as offensive. For example, the fourth definition was the dubious "A word that Jews use because they can't say the n-word," while the seventh simply defined the word as meaning "A Jew. A Hebrew. A person of Jewish ancestry." The latter, moreover, added an example clearly intended to mock Jews: "Ike the Kike bought a box of matzos for his girlfriend." Both of these entries appear to normalize the racial slur, and as such are classifiable as Type I lexicographic bigotry. However, the eighth entry defines "kike" to mean "A member of a god-hating tribe that has been kicked out of every country they have resided in, including their home country," and thus not only treats "kike" as an unproblematic term for "Jew" but adds a hateful assertion about Jews. As such, it spills over from Type I into Type III lexicographic bigotry.

The situation with regard to the word "Yid" was even less encouraging. The fourth highest-placed entry was the only one on the first page to recognize the word as a slur. Indeed, the third entry directly argues that treating the word as a slur involves "a major misconception." Thus, Type I lexicographic bigotry is again in evidence.

The Urban Dictionary also features more unusual examples of offensive terms, such as “holocaust nigger,” whose sole definition consists of just two words: “A Jew.” This instance of Type I lexicographic bigotry is accompanied by an example that accuses every Jew (or, to use its actual words, “every holocaust nigger”) of making false claims about the Holocaust, and a looping video with the caption “playing the victim” (an implied accusation against all Jews). Fig. 1 is a screenshot of the entry, illustrating the structure of a typical Urban Dictionary page, with external advertisements placed by Google AdSense and the offer of a print-on-demand Urban Dictionary-branded mug featuring the word in question.

FIGURE 1. Urban Dictionary entry for ‘holocaust nigger’

As the screenshot shows, the Urban Dictionary is able to receive advertising revenue from a range of sources. At the time when the screenshot was taken, these included the People's Postcode Lottery, the bookmaker and online casino games company, William Hill, and the major British furniture retailer, DFS, whose advert featured the popular cartoon characters, Wallace and Gromit. Branding for all of the aforementioned appears alongside this gratuitously offensive dictionary entry. But even if the Urban Dictionary had spared its advertisers from direct embarrassment by restricting advertisements to less controversial pages, it is hard to see why any reputable organisation would want to be associated with a website that popularizes terms such as "holocaust nigger"—and still less with one that retails "holocaust nigger" mugs.

Type II

As one might expect, there were numerous examples of Type II lexicographic bigotry with regard to the words "Jew" and "Jews," which were combined under the headword "Jews." The 11th most highly placed entry for that headword gives a reasonable definition for the noun "Jew" and then notes that "Jew is also used as a derogatory term for those who fit into the Jewish stereotype (cheap, money-hungry, unfair, or unscrupulous in business)." This arguably includes enough warning signals ("derogatory . . . stereotype") to avoid classification as Type II lexicographic bigotry, but the same cannot be said for the 15th most highly placed entry, which gives three reasonable definitions of the noun "Jew" and then defines the verb "Jew" as "to cheat someone, to get someone down on their price, to be stingy," without giving any indication that this usage might be considered offensive. As for the 25th, it solely consists of "Verb: To steal something from someone and never return it," while the 26th solely consists of "A cheap ass niggah . . . Or female" (ellipsis in original; given the spelling, the intention behind the latter use of the word "niggah" may perhaps not have been to offend).

The examples provided for these last two, that is, "I Jewed your family" and "why you gotta be such a Jew?," clearly normalize the antisemitic association of unscrupulousness and miserliness with the ethno-religious category of the Jew. Whatever the intentions of the authors of these definitions, using the standard term for members of a particular group as a verb denoting a form of criminal activity, or as a noun denoting ungenerous or miserly members of other groups, acts to cement the idea that these behaviours or tendencies are characteristic of that group. While the construction of such definitions would probably not be considered to amount to "[m]aking mendacious, dehumanising, demonising, or stereotypical allegations about Jews"—the first example provided by the IHRA Definition—these definitions only make sense in relation to a belief in the truth of such allegations, and as such clearly exemplify Type II lexicographic bigotry.

Type III

It is with regard to Type III lexicographic bigotry that the Urban Dictionary really distinguishes itself. We have already seen an example of Type III lexicographic bigotry in discussion of definitions of the word "kike." But much of the anti-Jewish bigotry in the Urban Dictionary is articulated in relation to Zionism. For example, the sixth-from-top entry for "Judaism" defines the word as denoting "A peaceful, spiritual religion that is not at all meant to be nationalistic or greedy" (emphasis added) but adds "SEE: NOT Zionism," implying that the latter is the opposite of all these things. A link to the website for the US branch of the anti-Zionist Neturei Karta sect is provided in the example, together with the words "Judaism is not Zionism—learn the fucking difference!" However, it would be a mistake to see all of the bigotry articulated in relation to Zionism solely in terms of the "new antisemitism." For example, the top definition for "Zionist" defines a Zionist as "[a] race supremacist, colonialist, extremist" and as "[o]ne who believes in a political ideology that hijacked Judaism, soon to hijack Christianity.” The idea of a forthcoming “hijack” of Christianity has nothing to do with the actually existing State of Israel, nor with the political movement which led to its foundation. By analogy with “antisemitism without Jews,”¹³ such discourse has been theorized as “antizionism without Zion.”¹⁴ The “Zionism” that it affects to oppose is a fantasy unconnected to the actually existing Jewish state, being no more than the old idea of a Jewish conspiracy to take over the Christian world, referred to as “Zionist” for perhaps no other reason than the allusion made in the title of the Protocols of the Elders of Zion (which despite their name, make no reference to the politics of Zionism).¹⁵ The second example of the IHRA Definition emphasizes the particular importance of “the myth [of] a world Jewish conspiracy or of Jews controlling the media, economy, government or other societal institutions,” and this is exactly what we see here.

The myth of a world Jewish conspiracy is invoked in many other Urban Dictionary entries, such as the example for the sole entry for the word “Zio-vermin”: a term which is said to refer to “those who promote the notion that Christianity is a form of subservient slave religion to Judaism.” That example further engages in Holocaust inversion with its reference to “the Zio-vermin bankers who financed Hitler in order to generate profit for German / Zio-vermin corporations that built the Nazi war machine.”¹⁶ Conspiracy fantasy is also promoted by the fifth-from-top entry for “Mossad,” which defines the latter as “[t]he institution behind all of the worlds tragedy,” and also states that Mossad “control[s] the media, the US government, and your life.” This is more of the same “antizionism without Zion”: it is not a discussion of the actual Mossad, but a quasi-theological discourse in which “Mossad” denotes an omnipresent and virtually omnipotent force of abstract Jewish evil.

The seventh example provided by the IHRA Definition consists in “Denying the Jewish people their right to self-determination, e.g., by claiming that the existence of a State of Israel is a racist endeavour.” Many entries in the Urban Dictionary appear designed to do precisely that. The top entry for “Israel” describes that country as “An ethno-religious, race supremacist, settler colonial, apartheid project created for some Jews in the Arab heartland mainly by terrorism and ethnic cleansing.” Like the above-quoted definitions of Judaism and Zionism, it attempts to draw a line between the religion of Judaism and the politics of Zionism, adding that “Israel came into being propelled by Zionism, a concept which made a mockery of Judaism’s moral values and ethical principles.” However, the second-from-top entry identifies Israel with quintessential Jewishness, defining it as “[l]iterally a Jewish ethnostate birthed out of the wrongful theft of land from the Palestinians” and “a liv[ing] embodiment of stereotypical Jewry.”

The top Urban Dictionary entry for “Zionism” is very closely related to the above, and defines its subject as “[a] colonial enterprise which created a state for some Jews in the Arab heartland mainly by terrorism and ethnic cleansing,” also adding that “Zionism made a mockery of Judaism’s moral values and ethical principles.” The same implication is taken further under headwords such as “Zionazi,” where the example given by the top entry consists of the statements that “[t]he Zionazi illegal settlers in the West Bank repeatedly use violence to intimidate Palestinians and seize their land” and “[t]he Israeli government aids and abets Zionazism,” and “Zionazism,” where the example given by the sole entry consists of the statement that “[t]he current Zionazism [sic] practices are eliminating Palestinian people, through the act of ethnic cleansing.” These entries would be regarded as antisemitic under the tenth example provided by the IHRA Definition, that is, “[d]rawing comparisons [between] contemporary Israeli policy [and] that of the Nazis.” On the other hand, the fourth-from-top entry for “Zionazi” refers neither to Palestine nor indeed to Israel, stating instead that “[a] Zionazi is defined by their will to create and support a single government or group that rules the world, such as the totalitarian New World Order” and that “Zionazis are working to centralize authority across national boundaries at the expense of personal freedom and economic liberty.” This is neither a rational critique of real-world Zionism nor even a comparison between Israeli policy and that of the Nazis, but simply an assertion of the reality of the antisemitic fantasy of a world Jewish conspiracy (referred to in the IHRA Definition’s above-quoted second example). In other words, it is yet another expression of the “anti-Zionism without Zion” discussed above: old-fashioned conspiracy-fantast antisemitism.

Extreme right-wing attempts to exonerate Adolf Hitler and other Nazis by presenting the Holocaust as having been exaggerated or even fabricated by Jews or Zionists have been in evidence almost since the end of World War II,¹⁷ and are referred to in the fourth and fifth examples provided by the IHRA Definition. Some entries in the Urban Dictionary do not go quite this far, merely using humour to trivialize the Holocaust. For example, the fourth-highest entry for “Hitler” defined the latter as “[s]omeone who got 6 000 000 kills in a single match,” while the fifth-highest made an almost identical reference to online gaming culture by defining him as “a man with a K/D [kill/death] ratio of 6 000 000 / 1.” However, other entries seek to deny or minimize the Holocaust, or at least to imply that belief in the Holocaust is the result of a Jewish conspiracy. For example, the top entry for “Holohoax” refers with apparent neutrality to “belie[f that] a smaller number of Jews died or that [the Holocaust] did not happen at all,” but then presents an example that presumes the correctness of that belief: “The Holohoax became a possibility after new evidence came out.” Likewise, the second-from-top definition pretends to a sort of neutrality on the factuality or otherwise of the Nazi Holocaust of the Jews, yet comes down on the side of those who deny its reality: “Although it is unsure whether the Holocaust was real or not, people who ‘deny’ the Holocaust seem to provide more proof and evidence supporting the fact the Holocaust never happened.” The example accompanying this definition dramatizes this idea with a dialogue between a hypothetical “Person 1” who says “I believe that Hitler killed and utterly slaughtered over 6 million Jews during WWII” (an explicit statement of apparently unsupported belief) and a hypothetical “Person 2” who replies, “It’s just a Holohoax created by Jewish media into brainwashing [sic] our current generation into believing [Hitler] was evil” (and does not hedge this claim with the words “I believe” or anything else to that effect). Not until we reach the fourth-from-top entry for “Holohoax” do we find a definition which identifies this term as one used by “white supremacists and antisemites.”

BIGOTRY AGAINST OTHER GROUPS IN THE URBAN DICTIONARY

Although most forms of bigotry are outside this article’s remit, it is clear that antisemitism is not the only one to find open expression in definitions and examples published on the Urban Dictionary website. For example, the top definition of the racially offensive term “nigger” is not a definition but only an expression of displeasure over how taboo against using that particular word has “caused numerous school districts to ban the great American novel, The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn.” This would appear to be an example of Type I lexicographic bigotry. By contrast, the second-from-top entry suggests that not all black people are “niggers” but that the term correctly denotes “gang-banging, uneducated, welfare-abusing, cap-popping, thuggin[g], no-good, drug-selling/using, nothing-but-rap-listening, terrible parenting, never-want-to-get-ahead-in-life blacks that nobody wants around.” This arguably exemplifies Type II lexicographic bigotry by suggesting that the term can legitimately be used to describe any black person who conforms to the racist stereotype of a black person. The fourth-from-top entry simply defines “niggers” as “criminals, thugs, and under-achievers who blame white people for . . . all their problems.” Given that there is no attempt to suggest that the term does not refer to all black people, it can probably be taken as an example of Type III lexicographic bigotry: the author of the definition is suggesting that all black people fall into that category, as well as treating “nigger” as an unproblematic label for all of them. The fifth-from-top is essentially the same as the second, while the third, sixth, and seventh all object to the prohibition of the word’s use by non-black people.

Not infrequently, one finds multiple forms of hate expressed in a single definition. This is not surprising, as the most digitally vocal antisemitic community in the US, i.e. the white supremacist “alt-right,” espouses an ideology of hatred towards all non-white groups. For example, the neologism “nigropolis” is defined as “The world after whites are all killed and race-mixed by Zionist Jews and niggers.” As with the Urban Dictionary neologisms discussed by Tagg (see above), this one would appear to have been invented in order to promote an existing idea: the racist “great replacement” or “white genocide” conspiracy theory, which has motivated a series of recent mass shootings by white supremacists targeting Jews and Muslims.¹⁸ For that reason, the sole entry for that particular word can be classified as Type III lexicographic bigotry.

CONCLUSION

It is clear that individuals with a hateful agenda have been able to exploit the publication infrastructure provided by the Urban Dictionary, turning it into a platform for the dissemination of antisemitism and other forms of bigotry. This exploitation is argued to have been facilitated by the site’s founding principles, which (as we have seen) presuppose the effective equality of all points of view.

The Urban Dictionary’s lexicographic free-for-all can be seen as a specific expression of the absolutist approach to free speech which has proliferated throughout Silicon Valley since the publication of the so-called Declaration of the Independence of Cyberspace and its subsequent promotion by the lobby group known as the Electronic Frontier Foundation.¹⁹ The Declaration describes the internet as an immaterial realm in which governments “have no sovereignty” and real-world “legal concepts . . . do not apply”;²⁰ ideas that have been legally established to be fallacious.²¹ Moreover, while it presents racial prejudice as having no meaning in cyberspace because online identities are disembodied, its espousal of the ideal of “a world where anyone, anywhere may express his or her beliefs, no matter how singular, without fear of being coerced into silence or conformity”²² appears to have been translated into a commitment to the idea that it is wrong to do anything that might impede the dissemination of any form of discourse, including expressions of racial prejudice and incitements to real-world violence. Jessie Daniels writes as follows:

When several tech companies kicked alt-right users off their platforms after Charlottesville, they were met with a vigorous backlash from many in the industry. Matthew Prince, CEO and co-founder of Cloudflare, who reluctantly banned virulently racist site, The Daily Stormer, from his service . . . fretted about the decision. “As [an] internet user, I think it’s pretty dangerous if my moral, political, or economic whims play some role in deciding who can and cannot be online,” he said. The Electronic Frontier Foundation issued a statement that read, in part, “we believe that no one . . . should decide who gets to speak and who doesn’t.”²³

Such arguments are commonplace where internet services are under discussion. Yet companies of the type represented by Urban Dictionary are at heart publishers—and to run a publishing company on the assumption that no one has the right to make editorial decisions would seem perverse. Certainly, it cannot be justified on grounds of any reasonable interpretation of the First Amendment to the US Constitution, which only acts to limit the power of government, and says nothing about a publisher's right to engage in the kind of decision-making that the business of publishing has always involved, whether on grounds of decency, profitability, politics, morals, religious convictions, personal tastes, or anything else that editorial policy or arbitrary preference may choose to prioritise.²⁴

The right to free expression does not imply the right to dissemination through a global top-1000 website. Nor does it place a privately owned company under obligation to retail "Holocaust nigger" mugs. If these things happen, that is because the owners or employees of the website or company in question have made choices which facilitated their occurrence. And if they are free to make such choices, then others must likewise be free to respond as they see fit within the framework that is afforded them by the market and the law. While some may consider a policy of indiscriminately publishing anything at all to be admirable, having adopted such a policy for philosophical or commercial reasons cannot exempt a publisher from responsibility when bad actors use its platform to disseminate materials that society as a whole is likely to consider repugnant. For when a publisher refuses to take its responsibilities seriously, customers, advertisers, and others have every right to take their business elsewhere.

REFERENCES

- 1 Tom Dickens, "Changing Ideological Directions: A Study of the Czech Dictionary, Slovník jazyka Českého (1937–1952)," Slavonica 6, no. 1 (2000): 30.
- 2 Matthias J. Becker, "Understanding Online Antisemitism: Towards a New Qualitative Approach," Fathom (October 2019), <http://fathomjournal.org/understanding-online-antisemitism-towards-a-new-qualitative-approach/>.
- 3 Working Definition of Antisemitism (Bucharest: International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance, May 26, 2016).
- 4 Pierre-André Taguieff, Rising from the Muck: The New Anti-Semitism in Europe (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee, 2004); Daniel Allington and David Hirsh, "The AzAs (Antizionist Antisemitism) Scale: Measuring Antisemitism as Expressed in Relation to Israel and its Supporters," Journal of Contemporary Antisemitism 2, no. 2 (2019).
- 5 "Dictionary will Revise Definitions of 200 Slurs," New York Times (New York), May 3, 1998.
- 6 Daniel Sugarman, "Association of British Scrabble Players Updates Definition of 'Jew' after Complaints: the Verb Was Defined as 'to Haggle, Get the Better of' on the Association's Word List," Jewish Chronicle (London) 2019, <https://www.thejc.com/news/uk-news/scrabble-association-labels-jew-verb-as-offensive-after-requests-from-uk-jews-1.488685>.
- 7 Maurice Casey, "Some Anti-Semitic Assumptions in the Theological Dictionary of the New Testament," Novum Testamentum 41, no. 3 (1999).
- 8 Information taken from <https://www.alexa.com/siteinfo/urbandictionary.com>; <https://www.alexa.com/siteinfo/cambridge.org>; <https://www.alexa.com/siteinfo/dictionary.com>; <https://www.alexa.com/siteinfo/thefreedictionary.com>; and <https://www.alexa.com/siteinfo/merriam-webster.com>, accessed 19 December 19, 2019.
- 9 Wikipedia, "Urban Dictionary [18 December 2019 edit]," 2019, https://en.wikipedia.org/w/index.php?title=Urban_Dictionary&oldid=931394759.
- 10 Private browsing is necessary in order to ensure that the browser's search history does not influence the rankings.
- 11 Caroline Tagg, "Digital English," in Communicating in English: Talk, Text, Technology, ed. Daniel Allington and Barbara Mayor (Abingdon: Routledge, 2012), 318, 21, quoting V. Heffernan, "Street Smart," New York Times (New York), July 5, 2009, MM, 16; Greg Myers, Discourse of Blogs and Wikis (London: Continuum, 2010), 146, 57.
- 12 Josh Adams and Vincent T. Roscigno, "White Supremacists, Oppositional Culture, and the World Wide Web," Social Forces 84, no. 2 (2005).
- 13 Paul Lendvai, Anti-Semitism without JEWS (New York: Doubleday, 1971).

- 14 Steve Cohen, That's Funny, You Don't Look Anti-Semitic (London: No Pasaran Media Ltd, 2019 [1984]), 72.
- 15 For the classic study, see Norman Cohn, Warrant for Genocide: the Myth of the Jewish World-Conspiracy and the "Protocols of the Elders of Zion" (London: Eyre & Spottiswoode, 1967).
- 16 For more on Holocaust inversion, see Lesley Klaff, "Holocaust inversion and contemporary antisemitism," Fathom (Winter 2014), <http://fathomjournal.org/holocaust-inversion-and-contemporary-antisemitism/>.
- 17 Deborah Lipstadt, Denying the Holocaust: The Growing Assault on Truth and Memory (New York: Free Press, 1996), 51, 55–98.
- 18 David Toube, "Conspiracism Threatens Both Jews and Muslims," Jewish Chronicle (London), December 17, 2019. See also Daniel Allington and Tanvi Joshi, "'What Others Dare Not Say': An Antisemitic Conspiracy Fantasy and its YouTube Audience," Journal of Contemporary Antisemitism 3, no. 1.
- 19 John Perry Barlow, A Declaration of the Independence of Cyberspace (Electronic Frontier Foundation, 1996). <https://www EFF.org/cyberspace-independence>.
- 20 Barlow, A Declaration of the Independence of Cyberspace.
- 21 Raphael Cohen-Almagor, "Freedom of Expression, Internet Responsibility, and Business Ethics: the Yahoo! Saga and Its Aftermath," Journal of Business Ethics 106, no. 3 (2011).
- 22 Barlow, A Declaration of the Independence of Cyberspace.
- 23 Jessie Daniels, "The Algorithmic Rise of the 'Alt-Right,'" Contexts 17, no. 1 (2018).
- 24 "First amendment to the Constitution of the United States" (1791), https://www.senate.gov/civics/constitution_item/constitution.htm#amendments.

Likes for Antisemitism: The Alternative für Deutschland and Its Posts on Facebook

Monika Hübscher

Abstract

The Alternative für Deutschland's (AfD) entry into the German Bundestag in September 2017 represented a shift in post-1945 German political tradition and the social acceptance of a party from the far right. During the election campaign, the AfD relied heavily on the social media mostly using Facebook to spread its agenda. This research on the AfD's attitude toward National Socialism, the Holocaust and antisemitism on Facebook shows that the party utilizes antisemitic stereotypes to defame political opponents and that further, the AfD instrumentalizes events from the Third Reich to elevate perceived positive aspects and strives to rehabilitate certain facets of National Socialism. The article first shows how the AfD uses Facebook to spread its unfiltered political views. Then, three case studies posted by the AfD will be analyzed. Additionally, the comments under the Facebook posts are taken into account to show how their followers perceive antisemitic posts made by AfD officials.

Keywords antisemitism, social media, Alternative für Deutschland, German politics

INTRODUCTION

On August 12, 2019, it was made public that a member of a group of AfD followers would be charged for incitement of the people and disturbance of the dead. He is accused of denying the existence of gas chambers and the relativization of Nazi crimes during a visit to the former Sachsenhausen concentration camp. At the time of the visit, the man was an official guest of Fraction Leader and Member of Parliament Alice Weidel.¹ This incident presents an opportunity to look back at similar events to trace how the AfD became what it is today: a party openly shunned and criticized by the Jewish community, despite all its efforts to present itself as “a natural political home” for Jewish people.²

Germany's Alternative für Deutschland (AfD) was founded as a response to the Euro Crisis but only became a successful party during the so-called Refugee Crisis in 2015. The AfD was elected to the German parliament (Bundestag) with 12.6% of the vote, thus far exceeding the 5% electoral threshold. Such a high result represented a breach in Germany's post-World War II political history, considering perceptions of the AfD that range from populist to radical right-wing. The success of the AfD has sparked a public debate about national identity, national pride, racism, the normalization of antisemitism and the memory of the Holocaust in Germany. During the election campaign, the AfD relied heavily on social media, especially Facebook, to spread its agenda. While political parties' official statements and publications adhere to a certain standard, such as conforming to the constitution, Facebook offers the possibility for politicians to share their opinion in an unrestrained way. But, unlike in other platforms such as traditional interviews, where a given opinion could result in critical questions or responses, the AfD has full control of their content on Facebook. Thus, Facebook is a useful tool to examine the more uncensored attitudes of the AfD towards the memory of the Holocaust, National Socialism and antisemitism. For this research, Facebook posts from the AfD's official Facebook account and the public profiles of senior figures of the party will serve as the primary sources. The analysis of these case studies shows enduring antisemitism within the AfD, the importance of social media as a tool of disseminating such ideologies, and that German society at large continues to struggle with the remains of National Socialism. Additionally, both social media and the AfD have contributed to a normalization of antisemitic transgressions. In its gravest consequence, antisemitism has manifested in real-life physical violence, as in the recent assault on a synagogue on Yom Kippur in Halle, Germany, in which two people were murdered in the course of the attack.

Primary Sources

The data was collected between January and mid-September 2017, prior to the elections in Germany. The four cases chosen offer a rich historical context for my analysis. These comprise two caricatures from AfD leaders' official Facebook profiles: one posted by Frauke Petry, speaker of the AfD at that time, and another posted by Björn Höcke, chairman of the AfD fraction in Thuringia's state parliament (Landtag).

Höcke's post is interesting due to his past as a history teacher and, thus, the expected familiarity with the history of visual antisemitism. The scandal of this meme lies within the fact that despite his assumed knowledge, he chose to post it, and it remains on his Facebook account to this day. Höcke is a radical agitator in the AfD who repeatedly draws attention to himself through scandals. In the years 2016 and 2017, he tried to participate in the memorial service for the victims of the Holocaust in the memorial of the Buchenwald concentration camp, even though he had been officially banned

TABLE 1. Characteristics of primary data sources.

Name	Position	Date	Post	Reactions (former Likes)	Comments	Shares	Views*
Björn Höcke	Chairman of the AfD fraction of the Thuringia state parliament	22.02.2017	Meme / Caricature	981	485	425	-
Frauke Petry	Former speaker of the AfD; left the party in 2017	01.04.2017	Meme / Caricature	3,038	413	1,085	-
Beatrix von Storch	Member of the German parliament	20.07.2017	Vlog	572	92	346	14,592
Alexander Gauland	Co-Leader of the AfD; Member of the German parliament	09.09.2017	Video	151	38	164	9,646
Source: Author's own compilation.

before. Additionally, in 2016, the sociologist Andreas Kemper conducted a language analysis of Höcke's speeches and publications and found that Björn Höcke has written extreme right-wing articles with ethnonationalist and antisemitic content under the pseudonym Ludolf Ladig.³ Just ten days before the International Holocaust Memorial Day, on January 17, 2017, Höcke provoked a media outcry with a speech that he gave in Dresden. In his speech, he referred to the "Memorial to the Murdered Jews of Europe" in Berlin as a memorial of shame. He continued by saying that Germany's culture of memory is a "stupid coping culture" that needs a 180-degree turnaround of its politics of memory of the Holocaust and National Socialism. He further called for a lively culture of memory, which above all focuses on the great achievements of German ancestors.⁴

While Björn Höcke and his extreme faction have gradually radicalized the AfD, Frauke Petry stood for the moderate wing of the party. Because of their seeming differences, their posts are essential for this analysis as both still opted to publish a caricature that featured antisemitic stereotypes. In an interview for the Israeli news in 2016, Petry rejected the claim that the AfD is particularly attractive to people with antisemitic tendencies and vowed that Germany has a specific responsibility in handling antisemitism. Further, she stated that when antisemitism appears within the AfD, it is dealt with accordingly and described her unsuccessful pursuit to connect to the Jewish population in Germany and Israel.⁵ During her tenure, she was actively involved in attempts to remove Höcke from the AfD for his antisemitic antics and ultimately indicated the radical right-wing tendencies of the party as her reason to leave it. All of these factors contrast with her Facebook post which contains a caricature with antisemitic features and thus make it an interesting case study. Although she has since left the AfD, Frauke Petry's tenure as AfD Chairwoman falls into the timeframe of the research and thus her post remains significant.

This article also presents analysis of a video blog (vlog) posted by Beatrix von Storch, Member of the Bundestag, on her official AfD profile. Von Storch's positions regarding National Socialism are particularly valuable for this analysis since she is the AfD's Commissioner for Antisemitism. Von Storch is regarded as a socially conservative Christian activist who opposes legal equality for same-sex couples as well as abortion rights and religious freedom for Muslims. From her point of view, Muslims and Islam are the sole source of antisemitism, so to her the AfD is the only German party that has precise positions against antisemitism, accomplished vis-à-vis their anti-Islam agenda.

The last example to be analysed below is a speech given by Alexander Gauland, chairman of the AfD in Brandenburg's Landtag and Member of the Bundestag and thus a senior figure, representing the viewpoints of the AfD. Gauland, a former CDU member, plays a significant role in the party's radicalization, with connections to Germany's far-right members and organization. Although he does not have an active social media account on his own, he is regularly featured in posts from the profile of the AfD in the German parliament and the post which is subject of this analysis was derived official Facebook profile of der Flügel, a radical wing within the AfD.

All four representatives are popular figures within the AfD and well-known in the general public and media. Thus, their output sheds light not only on their agenda but on what has become acceptable in public discourse and German society after the Holocaust. Therefore, this article presents analysis of these cases in both their historical and direct context, paying specific attention to language and linguistic devices, as well as to their treatment of themes such as the Holocaust, National Socialism, and antisemitism.

The AfD on Facebook

The AfD is the most successful political party on social media in Germany. The official AfD profiles have high numbers of followers, but they also mobilize the most users on the social networks.⁶ A study from Hohenheim University about the use of social media by political parties and candidates in the 2017 election campaign in Germany has shown that 62.2% of the participants got their political information from social media. These social media users actively noticed AfD content and perceived the appearance of AfD politicians as particularly strong, rating the strength of the AfD's social media impact at 55,1%, making it the second strongest party, only narrowly behind the CDU/CSU (58,4%).⁷ Research by Trevor Davis from the George Washington University (2019) indicates that the AfD is "Germany's first Facebook party," which has a much higher output than any other German party on Facebook, reminiscent of the level of the final stage of US presidential campaigns.⁸ Moreover, his study suggests that around 80,000 Facebook accounts that have frenetically disseminated and liked AfD content are social bots and not real humans that have been employed to boost the party's visibility on the social network.⁹ Another study conducted between 2013 and 2015 has shown that AfD supporters in particular perceive the content on their newsfeed on Facebook as very homogeneous.¹⁰ The social media appearance of the AfD is generally characterized by its distinguishing design. More than 75% of their contributions were posts with similar structure: a quote, a picture of the quoted person, and the AfD logo that has high recognition value. Further, the AfD was a trendsetter in posting short videos online in which they spread their message, a tactic they have used quite extensively.

On Facebook, the AfD is connected to the New Right, indicted by ties to the far-right initiative Ein Prozent, the extreme-right Compact magazine, the PEGIDA movement and the Identitarian movement¹¹ that are under observation by the police for the Office for the Protection of the Constitution. The connection is visible when they share and like each other's content, for example when the Facebook profile of Ein Prozent shares content from the AfD Saxony-Anhalt.¹² The AfD is profiting from its alliance with right-wing radicals and was able to increase their followers after the founder, Bernd Lucke, left the party.¹³ Several AfD politicians have been reported or have already been sentenced to pay a fine for incitement of the people on Facebook. One AfD politician from Saarland was sentenced after baiting against refugees.¹⁴

In cooperation with researchers of political language the Financial Times conducted research to detect words and phrases closely associated with the ideological language of National Socialism in the Facebook posts of the AfD. They found that between May 2015 and 2016, there was a 1,100% increase in the use of terminology such as Volksverräter ("traitor to the people") in the posts of the AfD.¹⁵ This clearly indicates the increasing radicalization of the party as expressed on Facebook.

In addition to the AfD's widespread use of Facebook, party officials also have accounts on Twitter, Instagram and the English-language free speech social network Gab, which is used extensively by radical right-wing extremists, white supremacists, Neo-Nazis, and the alt-right.¹⁶ Gab was made infamous following a mass shooting at a synagogue in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania after which it was found that the shooter openly posted his violently antisemitic intentions. Although the AfD's Gab accounts have been largely inactive, the mere existence of these profiles paired with the party's recent meeting and collaboration with personalities associated with the alt-right, such as Milo Yiannopoulos and Steve Bannon, are further indications of the direction in which the party is headed.¹⁷

To provide additional evidence demonstrating the radical turn in the direction of the party, I will now shift focus to some specific examples of how the AfD propagates its antisemitic agenda on social media.

Björn Höcke and Frauke Petry: Caricatures with Stereotypical Anti-Jewish Attributes

Although the antisemitic caricatures of Jews from Der Stürmer, an antisemitic newspaper published in Germany from 1923 until 1945, belong to the cultural memory of the Holocaust in Germany, such depictions have a much longer tradition.¹⁸ Since the Middle Ages, discriminatory depictions of Jews have existed in the form of basalt reliefs.¹⁹ These representations were religiously motivated and implied the Jews were the Antichrist, marking the beginning of the association of alleged physiognomic attributes of Jews as a mirror of inner qualities, namely, wickedness or malignancy.²⁰ Through the nationalization and militarization of the German empire, caricatures of deformed “Jewish” bodies appeared, which implied the Jews were unfit for military service (Wehrunfähigkeit).²¹ With the invention of the Jewish race by the anthropologist Johann Friedrich Blumenbach (1752–1840), arose the assumption of a particular shape/distinctiveness of the nasal bone of Jews. By comparing the shape of the skull and the angle of the face, the allegedly Jewish head was compared with that of Africans and, in accordance the prevailing racial theory at the time, equated with primates.²²

Soon these stereotypical Jewish physiognomic representations and the negative internal values they implied were portrayed in connection with enemy images such as liberals, social democrats, or communists. In the nineteenth century, anti-Jewish caricatures depicted physiognomic and professional stereotypes, such as financiers or bankers, which expanded the stereotype of the Finanzjudentum (the belief that Jews rule the global financial market).²³ Constantly repeated physiognomic stereotypes include an oversized, hooked nose; thick lips; big ears and black hair or curls.²⁴ The existing literature on antisemitic caricatures refer to such stereotypical depictions as visiotypes. Among the stereotypical depictions of professional groups are the finance and economic sector but also the fields of medicine and law.²⁵ Further, Jews in caricatures were associated with capitalism, liberalism, and the domination of the stock market and the press; and they were equated with social democrats.²⁶ “Jewish” attributes are used to criticize contemporary society and provide grounds for political agitation.²⁷

In the caricatures of Der Stürmer, Jews were blamed for all political, economic, and social grievances. Der Stürmer newspaper was an important propaganda material used by the National Socialists and had printed anti-Jewish caricatures on the title page since 1925. The caricatures illustrated by Phillip “Fips” Ruprecht resorted to the stereotypical physiognomic representations of racial theory. The hooked nose and the beaded lips were, by constant repetition in the publications, soon depicted and ultimately perceived as substantially Jewish. Anti-Jewish portrayals from the centuries-old image repertoire of the Jewish assassination of Jesus, the medieval myth of ritual murder and the Jewish usurer up to the NS-era notion of the *Verjudung*²⁸ of culture and politics were all portrayed in Der Stürmer.²⁹

The physiognomic stereotypes were complemented with simple recriminations and explanations about how the world works. For example, in many Stürmer caricatures, Jews were accused of sexual crimes and, thus because of racial defilement, a threat to the German people. A continuously repeated motif was also that of the Jew as a sub-human and as the personified devil and, due to the so-called “Jewish internationalism,” a Jewish world conspiracy was declared.³⁰

The AfD’s experience with posting caricatures on Facebook spans back to as early as 2014 with an antisemitic depiction of the British Jewish banker, Baron Jacob Rothschild, posted on Facebook by former state parliamentarian of Brandenburg, Jan-Ulrich Weiss. The post showed a photograph of Baron Rothschild next to a caricature. The text, which repeats common conspiracy theory tropes around the Rothschild family, said that the Rothschilds own every bank, finance both parties of every war, and control the media and government. Although recently removed from office after conviction on unrelated charges, Weiss was then acquitted by the Federal Court of Arbitration (Bundesschiedsgericht) and also cleared of the indictment of popular incitement because of a lack of clear antisemitic content. The court's decision is difficult to understand because the text, which refers to the idea of the Jewish world conspiracy, is prototypically antisemitic.³¹ Although further incidents have also remained largely unpenalized, this was ultimately just the beginning of the AfD's experience with posting antisemitic caricatures on Facebook.

On the official website of the AfD, there is a category for caricatures. The images caricature politicians like Angela Merkel (Christian Democratic Union), Horst Seehofer (Christian Social Union), Christian Lindner (Free Democratic Party), and Martin Schulz. As the only Social Democrat, Schulz is clearly marked with anti-Jewish attributes.³²

The following two examples, based on posts by Petry and Höcke, are particularly interesting because they concern Martin Schulz, who is not Jewish. They illustrate how the AfD uses antisemitic stereotypes to defame their political opponents.

On 22 January 2017, Björn Höcke posted a meme that includes text and a caricature that is supposed to depict the then-chancellor candidate of the Social Democratic Party (SPD), Martin Schulz.³³ The meme is mainly done in red, it being the color of the Social Democrats, and shows Martin Schulz's head on a bottle. The accompanying text describes in a sarcastic way that despite his lack of qualifications for the Privatwirtschaft ("private sector/economy"), Schulz is still the chancellor candidate of the SPD. The word Privatwirtschaft stands out in the text because it is highlighted in bold letters.

Martin Schulz's head is altered with antisemitic stereotypical attributes. He is portrayed with exaggerated thick lips and a hooked nose. The caricature only exaggerates features on Schulz that are associated with antisemitic depictions, such as the nose and the lips, and thus, the caricature is subtle and covertly antisemitic. The wine bottle, which refers to Schulz as a recovered alcoholic, dehumanizes him by replacing his body with an object.

FIGURE 1. AfD Facebook post of a meme caricaturizing political opponent, Social Democrat Martin Schulz, with stereotypical antisemitic features.

FIGURE 2. Bjorn Höcke's Facebook post of a meme representing political opponent, Martin Schulz, with stereotypical Jewish physical attributes.

Although the caricature does not have a manifestly antisemitic purpose, it implicitly applies anti-Jewish attributes to Schulz's face. Because these are associated with inner values, such as a malicious character, this post relies on a concept that comes from the tradition of antisemitic caricatures.³⁴ Thus, the image seeks to discredit Schulz by implicitly associating him with negative stereotypes of Jews.

The standardized pictorial representation of Jews, which has been impressed in the visual memory of the Germans, especially during the time of National Socialism, ensures their recognizability and can therefore also be applied to non-Jews.³⁵ Further, that Martin Schulz is caricatured with antisemitic stereotypes also springs from the reversal of the tradition of equating Jews and Social Democrats in the nineteenth century.³⁶

Although the caricature's accompanying text is quite sarcastic, the word Privatwirtschaft stands out. Especially in connection with words such as “economy”, antisemitic cartoons point to their historical tradition. The word Wirtschaft is a trigger word, since antisemitic ideology has always suggested that Jews are either the ruler and the beneficiary of the economy or responsible for the economic crisis.³⁷

By posting this caricature, Höcke instrumentalizes antisemitic stereotypes, such as the hooked nose, thick lips and the trigger word Wirtschaft to defame the SPD chancellor candidate. It might be expected that such a post would lead to a public outcry against antisemitism or even for the deletion of the meme, however, this post encouraged quite a different response.

Interestingly, the majority of the 241 comments below Höcke’s post are negative reactions towards the ridicule of Schulz’s recovery from alcohol addiction and his lack of Abitur and university degree. Some commenters call Höcke a history distorter (Geschichtsverfälscher) and a liar and refer to the fact that he is a history teacher. Others call Höcke inhuman and one commenter calls him “Göbbels-like” (Göbbelsverschnitt), and thus they demonstrate their refusal to accept the image. Although the majority of the commenters take issue with the text and not the depiction of Schulz, two comments refer to the caricature itself and express that it resembles those from Der Stürmer, an antisemitic tabloid from the World War II period. Commenter 1 asks whether the caricaturist was “dug out from Der Stürmer,”³⁸ and Commenter 2 says that the caricaturist’s grandfather probably worked for Der Stürmer and is thus referring to the tradition of anti-Jewish stereotypes.³⁹ Another remark from Commenter 3 writes that Julius Streicher, the publisher of Der Stürmer, would have been proud of Björn Höcke.⁴⁰ Still another commenter wonders what the features in the caricature remind him/her of.⁴¹ It is not possible to understand from this comment whether it criticizes or supports the caricature and the underlying message, however, it does draw attention to its connection to anti-Jewish stereotypes. Even the commenters who attest that the caricature bears a resemblance to those from Der Stürmer accept the stereotypical depiction to a certain extent—for example, they do not ask for its removal.

The overall lack of outrage against the antisemitic depiction might result from internalization of the hooked nose as a typically Jewish attribute into common knowledge. Thus, through the constant repetition of anti-Jewish depictions throughout history they have been memorized and are now regarded as “normal.”⁴² Further, the changes to Schulz’s face are subtle but by only exaggerating features that are in line with antisemitic stereotypes and by also exaggerating them in the tradition of antisemitic images, the negative intention becomes clear. However, because the aim of the caricature and the accompanying text is to attack Schulz’s personality, the stereotypical physical depiction does not play a prominent role in the comments.

Frauke Petry, then party leader of the AfD (Parteivorsitzende), also posted a caricature on April 1, 2017.⁴³ After the election on September 24, 2017, Petry left the AfD and established the conservative party Die blaue Partei, the Blue Party.⁴⁴ Despite that she is no longer officially associated with the AfD, it is worth looking into Petry’s post above all because she set the tone for what was acceptable during her time as the party’s leader.

The caricature depicts the then SPD chancellor candidate, Martin Schulz, blowing bubbles. There are five bubbles, each containing words: “more,” “more salary,” “more pension,” “more subsidies,” “more justice.” There is another bubble that already burst which says: “more SPD voters.” The repetition of the word “more” emphasizes excess and thus is portraying Schulz as unrealistic, fleeting, and greedy. One of the peculiarities of Facebook is its fast pace when providing information. Thus, users have the habit to just scroll through the information provided in their Facebook feed. Because this caricature comes with a rather long text, it can be assumed that the majority of followers disregard the text and focus on the picture. Also, in order to read the complete text accompanying images, readers are often required to open the whole post by clicking on “show more”—therefore it is not automatic that the text will be read in full or given equal priority to the image.

FIGURE 3. Frauke Petry's Facebook post of a meme depicting political opponent, Martin Schulz, with stereotypical antisemitic attributes.

If the caricature stands alone, it shows Martin Schulz with the antisemitic stereotypes like the hooked nose and thick lips, dressed in a suit and blowing bubbles. It then appears as if he wishes all the things in the bubbles, such as more salary, more pension and subsidies, for himself. According to the caricature, the bubbles symbolize the unsubstantial nature of his claims—promises unfulfilled, which depict him as a liar. The accompanying text discusses how the “populist” Schulz gives “promises of salvation” (Heilsversprechen) although those are just the “social-populist bubbles of the SPD”, referring to the bubbles in the caricature.

The comments under Petry's post differ drastically from those under Höcke's, although both show Martin Schulz with antisemitic stereotypes. Almost every comment agrees with the caricature and further shares a range of negative opinions about Schulz, suggesting for example that he is a liar or a traitor. Several comments associate Schulz with a world conspiracy that rules the economy.

For example, Commenter 5 replies with an image that shows a worker and his manager. While liquid, as a metaphor for money, is flowing out of a pipe into the mouth of the management, only a few drops fall into the mouth of the worker, who sits under the pipe. The pipe is labeled “profit” and the water drops are called “salary.” The manager sitting at the end of the pipe, receiving the profit is depicted with a hooked nose, huge mouth and his head disproportional to his body.⁴⁵ Commenter 6 implies that Schulz is part of a financial conspiracy including the European Union (Brüssel) and a Jewish investment banking firm.⁴⁶ Commenter 7 posts a meme and declares that Germany is not a democracy and that the Jewish investment banker and philanthropist George Soros has decided that Schulz will become the next chancellor.⁴⁷ Commenter 8 advises everyone to not believe one word that Schulz is saying and posts a meme with Schulz's face and a quote that says that the new Germany only exists for the sake of Israel.⁴⁸ Although this is a real quote which derives from an essay written by Avraham Burg for the Israeli newspaper Haaretz,⁴⁹ it is taken out of its original context and is instrumentalized here to insinuate that because of its Nazi past, Schulz deliberately indebts Germany to the state of Israel.

The examples have shown that although Petry and Höcke belong to two different wings within the AfD, both instrumentalize antisemitic stereotypes to defame political opponents. Further, the two examples show that the visual language of antisemitic stereotypes has been internalized so that on the one hand, they can be successfully put to work, and on the other hand, they are being recognized. The reception of the caricatures by the commenters has shown, with three exceptions where commenters have responded negatively by pointing out its resemblance to caricatures from Der Stürmer, that stereotypical antisemitic depictions are widely accepted, and their use is normalized.

Beatrix von Storch: The Stauffenberg Plot

Although there were many different types of resistance within German society against the Nazi regime, such as Jewish Communists (Baumgruppe) and groups within the Protestant and the Catholic Church (Bekennende Kirche and Martin Niemeier), youth movements (Edelweisspiraten) and student movements (Die Weiße Rose), as well as conservative elites (Kreisauer Kreis) and military resistance (Beck-Goerdeler Gruppe), it was still a minority of the population.⁵⁰ All attempts to resist the Nazi regime failed because they never gained popular support from the German people, and most members of the resistance were brutally persecuted, tortured and murdered.

One resistance attempt that has become part of the culture of the memory of the Holocaust in Germany is the Stauffenberg plot, a military attempt to overthrow the National Socialist regime. Among the main driving forces of the coup attempt on July 20, 1944 were General Olbricht, Major General Tresckow and Colonel Schenk von Stauffenberg. Tresckow, a conservative officer, was from the outset an opponent of Hitler for moral reasons, and under his influence, Stauffenberg joined the resistance in 1941.⁵¹ Tresckow was convinced that Hitler's assassination had to be carried out even without a chance for his death and a political change but as an act of conscience and as a sign of resistance to the world, which influenced Stauffenberg to eventually carry out the assassination attempt.⁵² Although the conspirators' attitude towards the persecution of the Jews remains unclear, their actions were nevertheless for ethical reasons, motivated to preserve the moral identity of the army.⁵³ The ideal of a resistance out of conscience has also been picked up and used by Beatrix von Storch.

On July 20, 2017, the Memorial Day of the Stauffenberg Plot, von Storch uploaded a vlog on her official AfD profile page on Facebook which has been widely viewed, liked, and shared. While all the mainstream parties posted or published something on the Holocaust Memorial Day in 2017, the AfD did not mention it. Thus, it was surprising that despite the AfD's point of view that there is an exaggerated focus on National Socialism in Germany, not only Storch but several AfD members on Facebook shared their thoughts about the Stauffenberg plot. For example, Thomas Rudy, member of the AfD in Thuringia's Landtag, posted a meme which shows a portrait of Stauffenberg with the accompanying words "The real Antifascism didn't have coloured hair."⁵⁴

In her speech in the vlog, von Storch is insinuating that the AfD is a resistance movement against the current German government, comparable with the Stauffenberg plot against the Nazi regime. This viewpoint is common for the AfD, and their stance as a political resistance against the “establishment” is not only manifested in their program but also serves as the main motivation for AfD voters.

The AfD’s resistance perspective is highlighted in a speech from Beatrix von Storch, in which she compares the Stauffenberg plot with other events of the German freedom tradition, such as Liberal Revolution of 1848, the Workers’ Revolt of 1953, and the Freedom Revolution of 1989. Von Storch points out that the Stauffenberg plot was a revolt of conscience against Nazi tyranny and that the lesson that can be learned from it must be protected and defended by every generation. The following is a transcript of the two-minute speech posted on Facebook:

The 20th of July, the day of the Stauffenberg plot is a special date in our history. It is an important day in our German freedom tradition. In addition to the events of July 20, 1944, the great events of this freedom tradition were the liberal revolution of 1848, the 1953 workers’ revolt in the GDR, and the freedom revolution of 1989. On July 20, 1944, the conspirators around Claus Graf Schenk von Stauffenberg had dared a rebel of conscience. Their attempt to eliminate the National Socialist tyranny has failed. But their sacrifice was not in vain. They have set a signal. They have left us a long-lasting message for all times. Never again should violence and terror triumph over democracy and freedom in Germany. Never again should freedom of expression and civil rights be suppressed in Germany. Never again should we blindly follow a political leadership and put the state above our conscience. Yes, we can learn from our history. We can learn that we must have the courage to use our own mind as the great enlightenment philosopher Emanuel Kant said. That we are guided by the spirit of freedom and not by the worship of power. That we should be free citizens and not submissive subjects. We need civic sense and not blind obedience. This is the message of the men of the 20th of July and that is the lore of our German freedom tradition. Freedom is a precious commodity, and each generation is recalled to nurse it, to preserve it, and to defend it.⁵⁵

Von Storch gives her speech in front of an image of the courtyard of the Bendlerblock, the site where Stauffenberg and his followers were executed, and which today serves as the “German Resistance Memorial Center”. The image is not coincidental—the AfD has continuously claimed to be a victim of discrimination and baiting from the media and the left. For example, Alice Weidel left a TV debate with representatives of other parties in the middle of a discussion because she felt she was treated unfairly and also the Berliner AfD filed a legal complaint against the justice senator because they felt discriminated against.⁵⁶

Von Storch uses the pronouns “we” and “us” throughout her speech without specifying who she is addressing and thus is implying that she specifically speaks to AfD sympathizers and not “we, the Germans”. This intentional ambiguity serves to divide “us” from “them” and unify that “us” around the AfD’s message. The inclusive “we” also makes her more relatable, making the intended audience feel like they are “part of it.”

Von Storch makes use of language that resembles that of a resistance movement against a dictatorship. Several phrases closely resemble wordings that were used in the leaflets of the White Rose: “Blindings folgt es [das Volk] seinen Verführern . . .”⁵⁷ (“Blind, they [the people] follow their seducers”), “Geistesfreiheit” (“the spirit of freedom”), “. . . die persönliche Freiheit, das kostbarste Gut . . .”⁵⁸ (“the personal freedom, the most precious commodity”).

In her speech von Storch does not provide any historical context around the plot except for the reference to the nationalsozialistische Gewaltherrschaft (“National Socialist tyranny”) and the date of the coup, July 20, 1944. She does not mention World War II, the racial ideology that was crucial in making National Socialism tyrannical, nor the Holocaust. She does not mention other resistance movements or the victims of National Socialism and the Holocaust, as is traditional on the memorial day of July 20 in Germany. If von Storch's speech would have aimed to commemorate the resistance against the Nazi regime, she would have mentioned other movements, such as the famous White Rose and with it, she would have referred to the victims of the Holocaust because in their leaflets, the members of the White Rose mentioned the murder of the Jews. Instead of referring to the historical events around the Stauffenberg plot or other resistance movements, von Storch is integrating the plot into the German freedom tradition, which consists of events in which German people revolted against the political system, and subsequently successfully created change within the country. Without the historical context of the Holocaust and its victims but with reference to former revolts, it appears as if the Germans had been the victims of National Socialism.

Von Storch urges her listeners, the inclusive "we," to never again let violence and terror triumph over democracy and freedom and to never again allow freedom of speech and civil rights to be suppressed and a political leadership followed blindly. With that, von Storch is insinuating a comparison with the current situation and government in Germany as manifested in the AfD party program: violence and terror from refugees and Muslims taking over, the lack of freedom of speech in Germany, and German citizens as silent followers of a political elite and oligarchy.⁵⁹ Subsequently, she is equating the resistance against a dictatorship with the resistance against a democracy. This equation is common for the AfD, also on their social media accounts. In January 2017 the Berlin state court forbade a meme that had been posted on the Facebook profile of the AfD district Nürnberg-Süd/Schwabach due to copyright infringement. The meme depicted Sophie Scholl and was headlined "Sophie Scholl würde AfD wählen" ("Sophie Scholl would vote AfD"). The text in the meme was a famous quote from Sophie Scholl in which she says that there is nothing more dishonorable than to be ruled by a dark clique without resistance.⁶⁰

Seeing the AfD's political opposition as a resistance equal to the resistance against the Nazi regime is mitigating its exceptional status in German history. Not mentioning the Holocaust and thus not putting the Stauffenberg plot into its historical context allows von Storch to insinuate that the current government is undemocratic and that the AfD is a resistance against it. This relativization and distortion of facts is reflected in the comments below her Facebook post. All these posts and her speech co-opt German heroes that resisted NS to the political purposes of the AfD. By claiming the AfD is in the same freedom tradition and that these historical heroes would support the AfD today, they are manipulating societal understanding of these figures to increase support for their political agenda.

In the comment section below her post some commenters express their feeling that Germany currently has tendencies of a dictatorship⁶¹ or even is a dictatorship.⁶² Another commenter asks whether von Storch is insinuating that Germany is currently a dictatorship.⁶³ Commenter 4 replies to Commenter 3 that indeed, Germany is a dictatorship⁶⁴ and controlled by Brussels (the European Union), or that there is less freedom in Germany now than in 1944.⁶⁵ Commenter 5 agrees and writes "We need more Stauffenbergs, or we have to show courage ourselves."⁶⁶ Commenter 6 expresses outrage that von Storch is not referring to Stauffenberg as a traitor.⁶⁷ Commenter 7 addresses von Storch directly and says that the time has come to "join" Stauffenberg and to "overthrow the Chancellor."⁶⁸ Some more comments follow, which express understanding that von Storch is referring to the current German government in her speech and also express the wish for a violent act, as in the Stauffenberg plot, to overthrow it.

The comments show that the language of resistance that von Storch employs by instrumentalizing the Stauffenberg plot is inciting. The commenters share the AfD's viewpoint that the current German government needs to be opposed with resistance and in reference to Stauffenberg, even with violent resistance.

With this case study, I have shown how Beatrix von Storch narrates the Stauffenberg plot, neglecting the historical context of different resistance movements and the Holocaust. When she talks about what lessons can be learned from the plot she is talking to an exclusive group and employing language that resembles the resistance against National Socialism, equating it to the current democratic political system in Germany. The AfD's stance as a resistance against an imagined dictatorship is also reflected in the comments below her post.

While von Storch's vlog exemplifies the instrumentalization of the Stauffenberg plot, the next case study focuses on the legend of the clean Wehrmacht and how it is intertwined with German national identity in a speech by Alexander Gauland that was published on Facebook by the extreme right wing of the AfD.

Alexander Gauland: Speech at the Kyffhäuser

Between 1935 and 1945, approximately twenty million German men served in the Wehrmacht. Because a father or son in almost every family had been drafted, the Wehrmacht had the character of a "people's army" in the German collective memory.⁶⁹

In the war against the Soviet Union, the Wehrmacht leadership revoked central points of martial and international law that Germany once ratified. This led to a war of destruction, marked by war crimes against the civilian population at the hands of the Wehrmacht.⁷⁰ There is a lot of documentary evidence of such war crimes: photographs of shootings or hangings taken by soldiers and also letters from the front in which soldiers depict the scope of the crimes.⁷¹ Further, although the official Wehrmacht records from the front are "clean," the Einsatztruppen reports describe the willingness of the Wehrmacht to cooperate in war crimes such as shootings of Soviet commissars and commanders, killing prisoners of war and providing support for or directly participating in the murder of Jews.⁷² Only a few months after the military command of the Wehrmacht announced its "honourable defeat"⁷³ on May 9, 1945, leading generals released a memorandum stating its role in World War II. They created an image of the "clean Wehrmacht" by declaring that the persecution and murder of the Jews had taken place under the Reichsführer SS alone; that the soldiers themselves, despite participating in war crimes, were detached from NS ideology, and thus able to maintain a degree of innocence.⁷⁴ In the 1960s and 1970s, historians' critical examination of the role of the Wehrmacht showed a contradictory image compared to its "clean" legend in the collective memory of the Germans. The results of the historical research evoked no response in the public sphere, but veterans' organizations protested against the "defamation" of the Wehrmacht institution and the reputation of its soldiers.⁷⁵ Widely publicized discussions on the legend of the clean Wehrmacht were brought to the public through the Historikerstreit (1986–87), Daniel Jonah Goldhagen's book, Hitler's Willing Executioners: Ordinary Germans and the Holocaust, in 1996, and the travelling exhibition War of Annihilation—The Crimes of the Wehrmacht Between 1941–1944, launched in 1995 by the Hamburg Institute for Social Research, which showed the Wehrmacht's involvement in acts of killing outside of regular warfare in Eastern Europe. The positive image of the Wehrmacht that had been created in several stages was challenged by the vast photographic evidence demonstrated in the exhibition, which around 900,000 people visited.⁷⁶

Nevertheless, an attempt to revive a positive image of the Wehrmacht was made by Alexander Gauland on September 2, 2017. Gauland gave a speech at the 3rd annual Kyffhäuser meeting of the radical wing of the AfD, called der Flügel.

The Kyffhäuser in Thuringia is a monument to German nationalism and today serves not only as a tourist attraction but also as a famous meeting point for right-wing nationalists. The video of the speech was posted on the Facebook page of der Flügel and widely disseminated. Der Flügel is the radical right-wing fraction of the AfD, initiated by Björn Höcke (chairman of the AfD in Thuringia's state parliament), André Poggenburg (chairman of the AfD in Saxony-Anhalt's parliament), and Hans-Thomas Tillschneider (member of the AfD in Saxony-Anhalt's parliament).⁷⁷ Tillschneider is also the founder of the Patriotische Plattform, which recently came under the attention of the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution due to extreme right-wing positions and its connection to the Identitarian movement, which is already under observation by state security.⁷⁸ Among the speakers at the meeting were those mentioned above and also Jörg Meuthen and Alexander Gauland, the focus of this analysis. The meeting at the Kyffhäuser is a closed event for AfD members only and especially those who are close to der Flügel or the Erfurter Resolution.

In his speech, Gauland states that Germans can be proud of the accomplishments of the soldiers of both World Wars, and he mitigates the time of National Socialism and the Holocaust by using euphemisms. After Gauland's statements became public, he reiterated in press conferences and interviews that 95% of Wehrmacht soldiers had not been involved in war crimes and that he was only repeating what Francois Mitterrand, French President at the time, said in May 1995 in his 50th anniversary speech.⁷⁹ While Mitterrand spoke in his speech of his personal experience with German soldiers during WWII and the speech itself had a different context,⁸⁰ Gauland shifts the blame to the criminal system and exonerates the Wehrmacht soldiers and thus continues repeating the myth of the clean Wehrmacht.

The trivialization of National Socialism or a positive identification with the Wehrmacht can be found in several social media outlets or interviews with the AfD. Alice Weidel, for instance, posted a video of an interview which she gave to the online magazine Vice. When she was asked how she explains National Socialism to her children she replied that her children know that Hitler was the worst because in the card game Tyrannen-Quartett which she plays with them, Hitler is the highest card.⁸¹ During the latest Bundeswehr scandal in which the Ministry of Defense von der Leyen considered renaming army bases after generals of the Wehrmacht, the Patriotische Plattform posted a meme on its website and on Facebook depicting a Wehrmacht soldier on a horse and written next to it "Schlagkraft statt Vielfalt, wir stehen zu unsere Truppe" ("Impact instead of diversity, we stand with our troops").⁸² The accompanying text describes how the Wehrmachtausstellung ("Wehrmacht exhibition") singled out specific war crimes in order to discredit the entire Wehrmacht.

Gauland himself has stated in an interview with the German daily newspaper Zeit in April 2016, that Germans do not defend their identity as much as other nations because of Auschwitz, that Auschwitz as a symbol has destroyed a lot in the German people and that Hitler has broken the backbone of the Germans. He continues by saying that while the British and the French confidently show national pride, Germans have to ask whether they are allowed to do that.⁸³ These themes are reflected in his speech on Facebook, which will serve as the main subject of analysis.

The following is an excerpt of the most relevant quotes from Gauland's 18-minute speech⁸⁴ posted on Facebook:

... To our historical memory belong, Stauffenberg and Rommel, Mars-la-Tour, Sedan, Cambrai and the slaughterhouse of Verdun. ... Who cleans up our history, destroys our identity. Yes, we have dealt with the crimes of the twelve years. ... No nation has so clearly cleaned up with a false past as that of Germany. Those twelve years do not have to be held against us. They no longer affect our identities today, and that is what we are talking about. If the French are rightly proud of their emperor, and the British of Nelson and Churchill, we have the right to be proud of the achievements of German soldiers in two world wars. . . .⁸⁵

In his speech, Gauland equates the battlefields of World War I (namely Mars-la-Tour, Sedan, Cambrai, Verdun) with the achievements Stauffenberg and Erwin Rommel, both famous Wehrmacht generals in World War II. Moreover, owing to the omission of the Holocaust and the reference to Stauffenberg and Rommel as representatives of the resistance against Hitler, Gauland is inflating apparently positive aspects of the time of National Socialism. That next to Stauffenberg, the AfD also considers Rommel as a part of the resistance becomes visible in a blog entry on the Patriotische Plattform, initiated by Gauland's Co-speaker Hans-Thomas Tillschneider, which states that Rommel died because of his resistance against Hitler.⁸⁶ Although Rommel had been accused of plotting against Hitler and was subsequently forced to take his own life, there was always a myth about Rommel and his alliance with Hitler, which has been widely debated among historians. Due to conflicting information, Rommel was suspected of belonging to the resistance and subsequently sentenced to death. He accepted the option offered to kill himself. Soon after his death, there were still contradictory statements about Rommel's membership in the resistance. Especially his wife spoke out against belonging to the resistance because she wanted to protect Rommel's legacy from being overshadowed by betrayal of the Führer.⁸⁷ In the course of the rehabilitation of the Wehrmacht, Rommel became a symbol of the "better military tradition" and was associated with the resistance. Wehrmacht generals, who wrote about Rommel, created an image of him as a sharp leader and resistance fighter.⁸⁸ This image changed in the 1980s when historians began to debate the role of the Wehrmacht in the Holocaust, in which Rommel was perceived by some as a war criminal. Although Rommel indeed opposed Hitler in a field report asking him to end the war, he had also been a convinced National Socialist.⁸⁹ Rommel exemplifies not only the ambiguousness of the military resistance but also of how Germans dealt with their Nazi past.

Although the AfD claims that German history is confined to the time of National Socialism, as manifested in their party program, Gauland says that to not acknowledge the achievements of the Wehrmacht means to clean history and thus destroy German identity, which is a contradiction. With the phrase Geschichte säubern ("cleaning history") he is using ideological language that was coined by the Nazis. The word säubern is inappropriate in the context of history and resembles the euphemistic language of Third Reich in which säubern and Säuberungsaktion referred to a purge, meaning the deportation or murder of unwanted persons, such as political opponents and Jews.⁹⁰

Gauland's depiction of National Socialism and the Holocaust as Verbrechen dieser 12 Jahre ("crimes of those twelve years") is a concealing narrative aimed to trivialize historical facts. By not stating what those crimes were and who was committing them, he is concealing the Holocaust and, even more so, he is leaving it open to interpretation from his audience as to what those crimes might have been. The use of euphemisms such as Hitlerei and Hitlerismus instead of direct references to National Socialism and the Holocaust is common for Gauland and serves as a form of both trivialization and rejection by holding only Hitler responsible.⁹¹ Although Gauland talks about falsche Vergangenheit ("wrong past"), it lacks any historical context.

Through the use of the euphemistic mitigation "those twelve years," the true historical context vanishes and allows viewers to interpret the Wehrmacht positively.⁹² Furthermore, Gauland tries to adapt the historical facts to his interpretation in order to justify the pride for Wehrmacht soldiers and to portray himself as a victim.⁹³ The idea of the Germans as victims here can be seen in the expression that Germany is reproached with National Socialism and the Holocaust, “Man muss uns diese 12 Jahre nicht mehr vorhalten” (“One does not have to reproach us with those twelve years”) and forced to accept them as part of their national identity: “Sie betreffen unsere Identität nicht mehr und wir sprechen das auch aus” (“They no longer affect our identity and we also express that”). By saying that “those twelve years” do not affect the German identity anymore, Gauland expresses a wish to put an end to the contemporary memory of National Socialism and the Holocaust, thus reigniting the debate of the Historikerstreit in the 1980s. Gauland counters this imagined reproach of collective guilt by interpreting the Wehrmacht as the collective innocent when he expresses that Germans have the right to be proud of the achievements of the soldiers of both World Wars.⁹⁴ Despite the fact that Germany lost both wars, he also disregards the Wehrmacht’s involvement in war crimes and the Holocaust. Furthermore, aware that being proud of Wehrmacht soldiers is a breach of the German collective memory of National Socialism and the Holocaust, he states that the AfD is not afraid of expressing such pride. By expressing pride for Wehrmacht soldiers who committed horrendous crimes, Gauland is not only undermining years of research and public education about the crimes of the Wehrmacht, but he is further ridiculing its victims. Implicitly, with the exoneration of the Wehrmacht, and thus with the ideology of National Socialism and the Holocaust, Gauland is expressing antisemitic attitudes.⁹⁵ By using euphemisms Gauland is trivializing National Socialism and the Holocaust, which subsequently results in the rehabilitation of National Socialism via the Wehrmacht.⁹⁶

There are several commenters that thank Gauland for his great speech. Two other commenters reacted to the video by posting links to websites that educate about the crimes of the Wehrmacht.⁹⁷ Commenter 3 writes that a deep gratitude for the sacrifice and fortitude of the World War soldiers is self-evident.⁹⁸ Commenter 4 expresses outrage about the fact that the “AfD wants to be proud of two offensive wars, millions of dead people and concentration camps while at the same time disregarding any sense of responsibility, awareness of history, and a consciousness of the extraordinary guilt.”⁹⁹ Commenter 5 also posts a link to an online article about a book by the historian Sönkel Neitzel in which he, together with social psychologist, Harald Welzer, analyzed conversations between Wehrmacht soldiers that describe the rape and murder of civilians.¹⁰⁰ In a reaction to this comment, Commenter 6 writes that the blame is always on the evil Germans, although the soldiers of the allies had also raped many German women during the “liberation” but no one is talking about that.¹⁰¹ To sum up, by thanking Gauland for his speech, people indirectly agree with the content of it without referring to any special details. Only 5 of 42 commenters disagree with Gauland’s speech by opposing his image of the Wehrmacht with historical facts about their crimes.

Based on this Facebook post one can see that Gauland marginalized the time of National Socialism with the example of the Wehrmacht and equated it with other events in German history. He rehabilitates the Wehrmacht by omitting the historical context of the Holocaust. Contrary to this, Gauland states that National Socialism no longer belongs to German identity. I will now turn to the conclusions drawn from the findings in my analysis.

CONCLUSION

The present study sought to examine the AfD’s attitude towards National Socialism, the Holocaust and antisemitism by analyzing Facebook posts of its senior political figures. Unlike every other party in the German parliament, the AfD does not reference the importance of combating antisemitism in their party program, nor does it present guidelines about how to deal with antisemitism within the party despite that it has been an internal problem since its inception. On the contrary, analysis of the Facebook posts by Frauke Petry and Björn Höcke depicting caricatures of Martin Schulz has shown that the AfD utilizes antisemitic stereotypes to defame their political opponents. The comments under the caricatures show a tendency to reproduce antisemitism which is accepted by administration of the AfD Facebook profile. With it, the AfD takes part in the acceptance and normalization of antisemitism in political and social discourse.

The AfD has a conflicting relationship towards the Holocaust and National Socialism. The party seeks to disregard the cultural memory of National Socialism and the Holocaust and argues that it has a disproportionate position in Germany's education and remembrance tradition, as manifested in the party program. The AfD instrumentalizes events of National Socialism to elevate perceived positive aspects, such as the resistance against the Nazi regime by the conspirators around Stauffenberg, as presented by Beatrix von Storch. Further, by framing the Stauffenberg plot outside of its historical context and by concealing the Holocaust, such examples insinuate that the AfD is a resistance movement against a regime, namely the current German government. This political posturing by the AfD not only undermines the democratic system in Germany but also has an inciting effect, as the comments under the post by von Storch reflect. Since von Storch's post is about a violent attempt to overturn the government in 1944, which some commenters suggested should also occur now, the inciting effect should not be underestimated in a country where verbal and physical attacks against refugees, migrants, Muslims, Jews, and politicians are daily news.

Even when the time of National Socialism is the topic, the concealment of the Holocaust is symptomatic for the AfD and as such it remains markedly invisible in all areas: from the party program and public speeches to Facebook posts.

References to the Holocaust as the mass murder of European Jews are the exception. The case study of Gauland's speech exemplifies how the AfD tries to rehabilitate aspects of National Socialism, here the Wehrmacht, by comparing it to other events in German history and excluding the Holocaust. By expressing pride for the Wehrmacht, the victims of the Holocaust are indirectly ignored. This not only testifies to an inability to empathize with the victims of the Holocaust but repeatedly violates the dignity of those who were murdered. This deliberate indirectness has antisemitic tendencies and comes close to the definition in German law that prosecutes the downplaying of acts committed under the National Socialist regime and the violation of the dignity of the victims by approving, glorifying, or justifying National Socialist rule.

While this study focuses on posts by senior figures of the AfD, the research phase on Facebook has shown that trivialization and rehabilitation of National Socialism and the Holocaust, as well as antisemitism as a singular phenomenon, increase in profiles and groups at lower ranks in the hierarchy of the AfD. It not only increases in occurrence but also in its bluntness and severity. Thus, research is needed to give an insight into how the attitude towards National Socialism, the Holocaust and antisemitism differs between the local groups of the AfD on Facebook and how this reflects on education about the Holocaust throughout the German states. Further, research about the commenters could shed light on how the AfD's attitude towards National Socialism, the Holocaust and antisemitism is received.

Facebook teaches political parties how to improve the circulation of their agenda—disregarding its content and thus, giving them a lot of power to influence societal discourse. In this analysis specifically, Facebook greatly empowers the AfD to shape the cultural memory of National Socialism and the Holocaust. Thus, this phenomenon begs for interdisciplinary academic workshops and committees which support and advise social media providers and governments on how to deal with antisemitism, the rehabilitation of National Socialism and the trivialization of the Holocaust. Due to the high impact that social media has on politics and society today, the findings from this research underline the necessity for monitoring and restriction. Although in 2017 Germany initiated laws called NetzDG that regulate freedom of speech online to combat hate speech, monitoring the vast amount of content on Facebook seems an impossible task. Thus, the German government needs to hold Facebook accountable and demand strategies from the company itself, particularly restrictions regarding the use of social bots that, for example, artificially create likes for posts with content that trivializes

National Socialism, thus implying its acceptance. Because of the freedom that Facebook gives its users and the major role it plays in shaping societal discourse about the memory of National Socialism and the Holocaust, researchers on antisemitism must pay attention and integrate it into their scholarship.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This paper was developed from my master's thesis research at the Weiss-Livnat International MA Program in Holocaust Studies at Haifa University. I especially would like to express my gratitude to Prof. emer. Moshe Zimmerman (The Hebrew University of Jerusalem) for his support.

REFERENCES

- 1 Alexander Fröhlich, "AfD-Anhänger wegen Volksverhetzung in KZ-Gedenkstätte angeklagt," Der Tagesspiegel, August 12, 2019, accessed September 13, 2019, <https://www.tagesspiegel.de/berlin/weil-er-existenz-von-gaskamern-anzweifelte-afd-anhaenger-wegen-volksverhetzung-in-kz-gedenkstaette-angeklagt/24895624.html>.
- 2 "Beatrix von Storch: Juden haben in der AfD eine 'natürliche politische Heimat,'" Focus Online, October 7, 2018, accessed September 13, 2019, https://www.focus.de/politik/deutschland/juedische-vereinigung-in-der-afd-beatrix-von-storch-juden-haben-in-afd-ein-natuerliche-politische-heimat_id_9717272.html. For in-depth analysis on this topic see also: Marc Grimm, "Antisemitismus und Pro-Israelismus in der AfD," in Antisemitismus in Geschichte und Gegenwart: Laupheimer Gespräche 2018, ed. Haus der Geschichte Baden-Württemberg (Heidelberg: Heidelberg Universitätsverlag, 2019), 116–120.
- 3 Andreas Kemper, "... Die neurotische Phase überwinden, in der wir uns seit siebzig Jahren befinden: Zur Differenz von Konservatismus und Faschismus am Beispiel der 'historischen Mission' Björn Höckes (AfD)," Rosa Luxemburg Stiftung Thüringen, January 2016, 31–45, accessed November 4, 2017, http://www.th.rosalux.de/fileadmin/ls_thueringen/dokumente/publikationen/RLS-HeftMissionHoecke-Feb16.pdf.
- 4 Björn Höcke, "Gemütszustand eines total besiegt Volkes," Der Tagesspiegel, January 19, 2017, accessed November 5, 2019, <http://www.tagesspiegel.de/politik/hoecke-rede-im-wortlaut-gemuetszustand-eines-total-besiegten-volkes/19273518.html>.
- 5 "Seeing World—Interview with Dr. Frauke Petry, Leader of the Right-Wing Party 'Alternative for Germany,'" Can 11—Israeli Broadcasting Corporation, November 27, 2016, accessed October 22, 2019, https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=I9_F8njF6C4.
- 6 Marco Saal, "Bundestagswahlkampf: AfD mobilisiert die meisten Nutzer im Social Web," Horizont, September 20, 2017, accessed September 11, 2019, <http://www.horizont.net/medien/nachrichten/Bundestagswahlkampf-AfD-mobilisiert-die-meisten-Nutzer-im-Social-Web-161248>.
- 7 Markus Voeth, Auswertungen Bundestagswahl 2017—Einsatz von Social Media im Parteien- und Kandidaten Marketing, Lehrstuhl für Marketing und Business Development, Universität Hohenheim, (2017), accessed September 11, 2019, https://www.uni-hohenheim.de/uploads/media/Auswertung_HR_Seminar_Social_Media.pdf.
- 8 Jörg Diehl, Roman Lehberger, Ann-Kathrin Müller, Phillip Seibt, "Facebook Frenzy: How the German Right Wing Dominates Social Media," Spiegel Online, April 29, 2019, accessed September 11, 2019, <https://www.spiegel.de/international/germany/germany-afd-populists-dominate-on-facebook-a-1264933.html>.

- 9 Trevor Davis, Matthew Hindman, Steven Livingston, "Facebook Isn't Ready for 2020," The Washington Post, August 14, 2019, accessed September 15, 2019, <https://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/2019/08/14/facebook-says-election-meddling-wont-happen-again-it-just-did/>.
- 10 Thorsten Faas und Benjamin C. Sack, Politische Kommunikation in Zeiten von Social Media (Bonn: BAPP, 2016), 38.
- 11 For in-depth Analysis on the Connection between the AfD and Far-Right German Organizations see Andreas Kemper, "AfD, Pegida and the New Right in Germany," in The European Far Right: Historical and Contemporary Perspectives (Oslo: PRIO Cyprus Centre, 2015), 43–48.
- 12 André Poggenburg: Mann des Volkes, Ein Prozent für unser Land, October 28, 2017, accessed September 11, 2019, <https://www.facebook.com/einprozentfuerunserland/posts/1832929160091349>.
- 13 Monitoringbericht 2015/16: Rechtsextreme und Menschenverachtende Phänomene im Social Web, Amadeu Antonio Stiftung (Berlin), 2016, 12, <https://www.amadeu-antonio-stiftung.de/w/files/pdfs/monitoring-bericht-2015.pdf>.
- 14 "Volksverhetzung: AfD-Politikerin muss 2700 Euro zahlen," Focus Online, October 11, 2017, accessed September 11, 2019, http://www.focus.de/regional/rheinland-pfalz/prozesse-volksverhetzung-afd-politikerin-muss-2700-euro-zahlen_id_7701988.html.
- 15 David Blood and Haluka Maier-Borst, "Rightwing Populist AfD Dominates German Twitter, New Study Shows," Financial Times, September 19, 2017, accessed September 11, 2019, <https://www.ft.com/content/760fbd14-9c5f-11e7-8cd4-932067fbf946>.
- 16 Yuchen Zhou, Mark Dredze, David A. Broniatowski, and William D. Adler, "Gab: The Alt-Right Social Media Platform," John Hopkins University, 2018, accessed October 13, 2019, http://www.cs.jhu.edu/~mdredze/publications/2018_sbpbrims_gab.pdf.
- 17 Stefan Lauer, "Von Impfgegnern, Aliens und gefallenen Alt-Right Ikonen," Belltower News, May 17, 2019, accessed September 11, 2019, <https://www.belltower.news/afd-medienkonferenz-von-impfgegnern-aliens-und-gefallenen-alt-right-ikonen-85211/>.
- 18 See Sander Gilman, The Jew's Body (New York: Routledge, 1991).
- 19 Eduard Fuchs, Die Juden in der Karikatur (München: Verlag Albert Langen, 1921), 111.; Thomas Gräfe, "Judenfeindliche Karikaturen im 19. Jahrhundert," in Handbuch des Antisemitismus. Judenfeindschaft in Geschichte und Gegenwart: Literatur, Film, Theater, Kunst (Berlin: de Gruyter, 2015), 218; Jasmin Weibl-Stockner, Die Juden sind unser Unglück (Münster: LIT Verlag, 2009), 238–39.
- 20 Gräfe, Judenfeindliche Karikaturen, 220; Dan Diner, "Verschwörung," in Enzyklopädie jüdischer Geschichte und Kultur (Stuttgart: Verlag JB Metzler, 2011–2015), vol. 6, 275; František Graus, "Judenfeindschaft im Mittelalter," in Antisemitismus: Von der Judenfeindschaft zum Holocaust, ed. Herbert A. Strauss and Norbert Kampe, vol. 213 of Schriftenreihe der Bundeszentrale für Politische Bildung (Bonn: Bundeszentrale für politische Bildung, 1984), 38.
- 21 Julia Schäfer, "Verzeichnet: Über 'Judenbilder' in der Karikatur als historische Quelle," Jahrbuch für Antisemitismusforschung 10 (2001): 147; Fuchs, Die Juden in der Karikatur, 153–56.
- 22 Fuchs, Die Juden in der Karikatur, 161–62; Rainer Erb, "Die Wahrnehmung der Physiognomie der Juden: Die Nase," in Das Bild der Juden in der Volks- und Jugendliteratur vom 18. Jahrhundert bis 1945, ed. Heinrich Pleticha, vol. 7 of Schriftenreihe der Deutschen Akademie für Kinder- und Jugendliteratur Volkach e.V., (Würzburg: Verlag Königshausen und Neumann, 1985), 113–15.
- 23 Gräfe, Judenfeindliche Karikaturen im 19. Jahrhundert, 218.
- 24 Regina Schleicher, Antisemitismus in der Karikatur: Zur Bildpublizistik in der französischen Dritten Republik und im deutschen Kaiserreich, 1871–1914 (Frankfurt am Main: Peter Lang, 2009), 50.
- 25 Gräfe, Judenfeindliche Karikaturen im 19. Jahrhundert, 219.
- 26 Fuchs, Die Juden in der Karikatur, 248–49; Gräfe, Judenfeindliche Karikaturen im 19. Jahrhundert, 220.
- 27 Schäfer, "Verzeichnet," 139.
- 28 The word verjudet means "dominated by Jews" or "under Jewish influence" and was a common antisemitic slogan to depict the SPD and other political parties or institutions in the late nineteenth century. See Karl-Heinz Brackmann and Renate Birkenhauer, NS-Deutsch: "Selbstverständliche" Begriffe und Schlagwörter aus der Zeit des Nationalsozialismus (Straelen: Straelener Manuskripte Verlag, 1988), 190.

- 29 Carl Eric Linsler, "Stürmer-Karikaturen," in Handbuch des Antisemitismus. Judenfeindschaft in Geschichte und Gegenwart: Literatur, Film, Theater, Kunst (Berlin: de Gruyter, 2015), 478.
- 30 Waibl-Stockner, Die Juden sind unser Unglück, 253; Linsler, Stürmer-Karikaturen, 477–80.
- 31 Armin Pfahl-Traughber, "Die AfD und der Antisemitismus. Eine Analyse zu Positionen, Skandalen und Verhaltensweisen," Jahrbuch für Antisemitismusforschung 25 (2016): 279–282.
- 32 "Alternative Karikaturen," Alternative für Deutschland, accessed September 11, 2019, <https://www.afd.de/karikaturen/>.
- 33 Björn Höcke, no title, February 22, 2017, accessed September 11, 2019, <https://www.facebook.com/Bjoern.Hoecke.AfD/posts/1842331419341469:0>.
- 34 Cp. Pfahl-Traughber, Die AfD und der Antisemitismus, 272.
- 35 Gräfe, Judenfeindliche Karikaturen im 19. Jahrhundert, 219.
- 36 In the eyes of the antisemites, Social Democratic parties were verjudete Parteien. See: Karl-Heinz Brackmann and Renate Birkenhauer, NS-Deutsch, 190.
- 37 Dan Diner, Verschwörung, 272–77.
- 38 Commenter 1: "Wo haben Sie denn den Karikaturisten ausgegraben, beim Stürmer? BTW: Als jemand der noch keinen einzigen Euro (sorry Reichsmark gibts nicht mehr) in seinem Berufsleben verdient hat, der nicht aus dem Steuersäckel kam, wäre ich an Ihrer Stelle etwas vorsichtiger mit Verweisen auf Erfolge in der Privatwirtschaft."
- 39 Commenter 2: "Tja. Immer, wenn ich denke, tiefer kann selbst so ein Mensch wie Björn Höcke nicht mehr sinken, dann gehen Sie hin und beweisen mir das Gegenteil. Ich wette, der Opa des Karikaturisten, dem wir diese geschmacklose Gemeinheit verdanken, hat schon für den 'Stürmer' gezeichnet. Absolut widerlich."
- 40 Commenter 3: "Julius Streicher wäre stolz auf Höcke. Allen anderen bleibt nur freundschaften."
- 41 Commenter 4: "An was erinnern mich nur diese Züge?"
- 42 Werner Bergmann and Rainer Erb, Antisemitismus in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland: Ergebnisse der empirischen Forschung von 1946–1989 (Opladen: Leske und Budrich, 1991), 114–35.
- 43 Dr. Frauke Petry, "Die sozialpopulistischen Seifenblasen der SPD," April 1, 2017, accessed September 11, 2019, <https://www.facebook.com/Dr.Frauke.Petry/photos/a.782724038446912.1073741828.782456275140355/1425382060847770/?type=3&theater>.
- 44 Rebecca Staudenmeier, "Ex-AfD chief Frauke Petry unveils new conservative 'Blue Party'," Deutsche Welle, October 13, 2017, accessed September 11, 2019: <https://www.dw.com/en/ex-afd-chief-frauke-petry-unveils-new-conservative-blue-party/a-40938707>.
- 45 Commenter 5: "Das ist so und bleibt so! Und wer das ändern will . . ."
- 46 Commenter 6: "Das hat er von Goldman & Sachs in Brüssel gelernt."
- 47 Commenter 7: "Picture."
- 48 Commenter 8: "Picture."
- 49 Avraham Burg, "Say a big 'Thank you' to Martin Schulz," HAARETZ, February 14, 2014, accessed September 13, 2019, <http://www.haaretz.com/opinion/.premium-1.574332>.
- 50 Peter Steinbach and Johannes Tuchel, eds., Widerstand gegen den Nationalsozialismus, vol. 323 of Schriftenreihe der Bundeszentrale für politische Bildung (Bonn: Bundeszentrale für politische Bildung, 1994); Gerd R. Ueberschär, Für ein anderes Deutschland: Der deutsche Widerstand gegen den NS-Staat 1933–1945 (Frankfurt am Main: Fischer Taschenbuchverlag, 2006).
- 51 Hans Mommsen, Alternatives to Hitler: German Resistance under the Third Reich (Princeton: Princeton University Press 2003), 403.
- 52 Klaus-Jürgen Müller, "Über den 'militärischen' Widerstand," in Steinbach and Tuchel, Widerstand gegen den Nationalsozialismus, 279.
- 53 Mommsen, Alternatives to Hitler, 406.
- 54 Thomas Rudy, "20. Juli 1944," July 20, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <https://www.facebook.com/thomas.rudy.afd/photos/a.669719703135816.1073741828.655170387924081/1359788394128940/?type=3&theater>.
- 55 Der 20. Juli, der Tag des Stauffenberg Attentates ist in unserer Geschichte ein besonderes Datum. Es ist ein wichtiger Tag in unserer deutschen Freiheitstradition. Die großen Ereignisse dieser Freiheitstradition waren neben den Ereignissen des 20. Juli 1944 die liberale Revolution von 1848, der Arbeiteraufstand in der DDR von 1953 und die freiheitliche Revolution von 1989. Am 20. Juli 1944 haben die Verschwörer um Claus Graf Schenk von Stauffenberg einen Aufstand des Gewissens gewagt. Ihr Versuch, die nationalsozialistische Gewaltherrschaft zu beseitigen ist gescheitert. Doch ihr Opfer war dennoch nicht für umsonst.

Sie haben ein Zeichen gesetzt. Sie haben uns für alle Zeit eine dauerhafte Botschaft hinterlassen. Niemals wieder dürfen in Deutschland Gewalt und Terror über Demokratie und Freiheit triumphieren. Niemals wieder dürfen in Deutschland Meinungsfreiheit und Bürgerechte unterdrückt werden. Niemals wieder dürfen wir blind einer politischen Führung folgen und den Staat über unser Gewissen stellen. Ja, wir können aus unserer Geschichte lernen. Wir können lernen, dass wir den Mut haben müssen, uns unseres eigenen Verstandes zu bedienen, wie der große Aufklärungsphilosoph Emanuel Kant sagte. Das wir uns vom Geist der Freiheit leiten lassen und nicht von der Anbetung der Macht. Das wir freie Bürger sein sollen und keine willfähigen Untertanen. Das wir Bürgersinn brauchen und keinen Kadavergehorsam. Das ist die Botschaft der Männer des 20. Juli und das ist die Überlieferung unserer deutschen Freiheitstradition. Freiheit ist ein kostbares Gut und jede Generation ist erneuert dazu aufgerufen sie zu pflegen, sie zu bewahren und sie zu verteidigen.

- 56 Alice Weidel, "Stellungnahme zur Sendung 'Wie geht's, Deutschland?'", September 5, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <https://www.facebook.com/aliceweidel/posts/1680477248630170:0>; "Vorwurf: Diskriminierung von Kandidaten: AfD reicht Klage gegen Justizsenator Behrendt ein," RBB24, May 19, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <https://www.rbb24.de/politik/wahl/bundestag/beitraege/afd-reicht-organklage-gegen-justizsenator-ein.html>.
- 57 "Fünftes Flugblatt der Weißen Rose verfasst von Kurt Huber nach einem Entwurf von Hans Scholl Januar 1943," Gedenkstätte Deutscher Widerstand, Bundesarchiv, R 3018/NJ 1704, Bd. 32, accessed September 13, 2019, http://www.gdwberlin.de/fileadmin/bilder/publ/begleitmaterialien/Faksimiles_PDFs_deutsch/FS_15.5_DE_2_Aufl-RZ-web.pdf.
- 58 "Sechstes Flugblatt der Weißen Rose verfasst von Kurt Huber, Februar 1943," Gedenkstätte Deutscher Widerstand, Bundesarchiv R 3018/NJ 1704, Bd. 32, accessed September 13, 2019, http://www.gdw-berlin.de/fileadmin/bilder/publ/begleitmaterialien/Faksimiles_PDFs_deutsch/FS_15.6_DE_2_Aufl-RZ-web.pdf.
- 59 "Heimlicher Souverän in Deutschland ist eine kleine, machtvolle politische Oligarchie, die sich in den bestehenden politischen Parteien ausgebildet hat. Sie hat die Fehlentwicklungen der letzten Jahrzehnte zu verantworten. Es hat sich eine politische Klasse herausgebildet, deren vordringliches Interesse ihrer Macht, ihrem Status und ihrem materiellen Wohlergehen gilt. Diese Oligarchie hat die Schalthebel der staatlichen Macht, der politischen Bildung und des informationellen und medialen Einflusses auf die Bevölkerung in Händen." Programm für Deutschland: Wahlprogramm der Alternative für Deutschland für die Wahl zum Deutschen Bundestag am 24. September 2017, Alternative für Deutschland, 8, accessed September 13, 2019, https://www.afd.de/wp-content/uploads/sites/111/2017/06/2017-06-01_AfD-Bundestagswahlprogramm_Onlinefassung.pdf.
- 60 Jenny Kallenbrunnen, "AfD darf ihr umstrittenes Sophie-Scholl-Werbeplakat nicht mehr nutzen," Stern, January 26, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <https://www.stern.de/politik/deutschland/afd-wahlplakat-mit-sophie-scholl-wird-durch-gericht-verboden-7300312.html>.
- 61 Commenter 1: "Und am 20. Juli 2017 muss man feststellen, dass wir hinsichtlich Freiheit für den angeblichen Souverän (dt. Volk) in der Geschichte der BR Deutschland einen historischen Tiefststand 'erreicht' haben. 'Rechtsstaatlichkeit' und 'Demokratie' liegen in Trümmern."
- 62 Commenter 2: "... eine Diktatur aus Brüssel."
- 63 Commenter 3: "Also leben wir laut ihrer Meinung in einer Diktatur? Oder wie kann man das verstehen?"
- 64 Commenter 4: "... ja (commenter 3) richtig erkannt ... eine verkappte diktatur ist das system das diese stasifratze hier einleitet ... und 80% der bürger sind noch dümmer und gehorsamer als je zuvor!"
- 65 Commenter 5: "Das Problem besteht darin, dass Deutschland jetzt weniger frei ist als 1944."
- 66 Commenter 6: "Wir brauchen ein paar Stauffenberg's, oder selber MUT beweisen."
- 67 Commenter 7: "Liebe verehrte Frau v.Storch, nun, es mag sein, dass Sie diesen Tag, als einen besondern Tag 'der Geschichte dieses Landes' herausstellen möchten, bedenken Sie aber 1). dass sich das Deutsche Reich im Krieg befand und die Gesetze damit eine besondere Bedeutung hatten. 2). dass sich—auch in keinem anderen kriegführenden Land dieser Welt—'erlauben durfte', im Sinne des Feindes zu agieren, hier in diesem Moment nicht von Verrat zu sprechen, entzieht sich meiner derzeitigen Vorstellung von Vaterlandstreue. Nun, man mag über die politische Einstellung der damaligen Regierungspartei—aus heutiger Sicht—unterschiedlicher Meinung, aber während des Krieges, im Sinne des feindes zu agieren, halte ich schon für sehr grenzwertig! Zumal, die Politiker des

- Dritten Reiches—was hinsichtlich der vielen inzwischen freigegeben Dokumente offensichtlich ist—viele Schritte unternommen hatten, einen Krieg zu vermeiden.“
- 68 Commenter 8: “Dann wird es Zeit Frau Beatrix von Storch, dass Sie sich dem Claus Graf Schenk von Stauffenberg anschließen und die Kanzlerin stürzen!”
 - 69 Wolfram Wette and Deborah Lucas Schneider, The Wehrmacht: History, Myth, Reality (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 2007), 202.
 - 70 Christopher R. Browning and Jürgen Matthäus, The Origins Of The Final Solution: the Evolution of Nazi Jewish Policy, September 1939–March 1942 (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2004), 213–243.
 - 71 Wette and Schneider, The Wehrmacht, 198–99; Browning and Matthäus, The Origins Of The Final Solution, 265.
 - 72 Wette and Schneider, The Wehrmacht, 219.
 - 73 Ibid., 204; Verbrechen der Wehrmacht: Dimensionen des Vernichtungskrieges 1941–1944 (Hamburg: Hamburger Edition, 2002), 639.
 - 74 Wette and Schneider, The Wehrmacht, 208.
 - 75 Verbrechen der Wehrmacht, 681.
 - 76 Bill Niven, Facing the Nazi Past (London: Routledge, 2004), 120–42.
 - 77 Hajo Funke, Von Wutbürgern und Brandstiftern (Berlin: Verlag für Berlin-Brandenburg, 2016), 69.
 - 78 “Patriotische Plattform: Verfassungsschutz nimmt AfD-Gruppe ins Visier,” Spiegel Online, June 2, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <http://www.spiegel.de/politik/deutschland/afd-verfassungsschutz-nimmt-patriotische-plattform-ins-visier-a-1150411.html>.
 - 79 Cornelia Barthelme, “AfD Spitzenkandidat Alexander Gauland: ‘Seid nicht zu empfindlich,’” Frankfurter Neue Presse, September 21, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <http://www.fnp.de/nachrichten/politik/AfD-Spitzenkandidat-Alexander-Gauland-Seid-nicht-zu-empfindlich;art673,2774181?mobileVersion=no>.
 - 80 Francois Mitterrand, “Zum 50. Jahrestag des Endes des Zweiten Weltkrieges—Staatsakt in Berlin am 8. Mai 1995—Ansprache des französischen Staatspräsidenten,” Die Bundesregierung, May 12, 1995, accessed September 13, 2019, https://www.bundesregierung.de/Content/DE/Bulletin/1990-1999/1995/38-95_Mitterrand.html.
 - 81 “Wie erklären Sie Ihren Kindern den Nationalsozialismus? Wieso setzen Sie sich nicht für andere Homosexuelle ein? 10 Fragen an Alice Weidel, AfD,” AfD Greiz-Altenburg, September 17, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <https://www.facebook.com/afdgrzabg/posts/964418233697601>.
 - 82 “Schlagkraft statt Vielfalt—wir stehen zu unserer Truppe,” Patriotische Plattform, May 15, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <https://patriotische-plattform.de/blog/2017/05/15/schlagkraft-statt-vielfalt-wir-stehen-zu-unserer-truppe/>.
 - 83 Bern Ulrich and Matthias Geis, “Hitler hat den Deutschen das Rückgrat gebrochen,” Zeit Online, April 28, 2016, accessed September 15, 2019, <http://www.zeit.de/2016/17/alexander-gauland-afd-cdu-konservatismus>.
 - 84 “Die Rede des stellv. Bundessprechers der AfD und Vorsitzenden der AfD-Fraktion im Brandenburgischen Landtag Dr. Alexander Gauland anlässlich des 3. Kyffhäusertreffens des Flügels am 2. September 2017,” Der Flügel, September 9, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <https://www.facebook.com/derfluegel/videos/2047521268811569/>.
 - 85 “. . . Zu unserer historischen Erinnerung gehören Stauffenberg und Rommel, Mars-la Tour, Sedan, Cambrai und das Schlachthaus von Verdun. . . . Liebe Freunde, wer Geschichte säubert, zerstört unsere Identität. Ja, wir haben uns mit den Verbrechen der 12 Jahre auseinandergesetzt. . . . Kein Volk hat so deutlich mit einer falschen Vergangenheit aufgeräumt wie das Deutsche. Man muss uns diese 12 Jahre nicht mehr vorhalten. Sie betreffen unsere Identität heute nicht mehr und das sprechen wir auch aus. Wenn die Franzosen zu Recht stolz auf ihren Kaiser sind, und die Briten auf Nelson und Churchill, haben wir das Recht, stolz zu sein, auf die Leistungen deutscher Soldaten in zwei Weltkriegen. . . .”
 - 86 “Schlagkraft statt Vielfalt: Wir stehen zu unserer Truppe,” Patriotische Plattform, May 15, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, <https://patriotische-plattform.de/blog/2017/05/15/schlagkraft-statt-vielfalt-wir-stehen-zu-unserer-truppe/>.
 - 87 Ralf Georg Reuth, Rommel: The End of a Legend (London: Haus Publishing, 2005), 64.
 - 88 Ibid., 65.
 - 89 Ibid., 68.
 - 90 Brackmann and Birkenhauer, NS-Deutsch, 166.
 - 91 Jung und Naiv, “Kein Schamgefühl: Gauland (AfD) über Hitlers Verbrechen an die Deutschen,” Bundespressekonferenz May 8, 2017, accessed September 13, 2019, https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=n_7LZNeV_cc; Alexander Gauland, “Die Rückkehr der Geschichte: Leugnen schafft Kulturunterschiede nicht aus der Welt,” Der Tagesspiegel, April 4, 2006,

- accessed September 13, 2019, <http://www.tagesspiegel.de/meinung/die-rueckkehr-der-geschichte/701320.html>.
- 92 Samuel Salzborn, "Von der offenen zur geschlossenen Gesellschaft: Die AfD und die Renaissance des deutschen Opfermythos im rechten Diskurs," in AfD & FPÖ: Antisemitismus, völkischer Nationalismus und Geschlechterbilder, Interdisziplinäre Antisemitismusforschung, vol.7, ed. Stephan Grigat (Baden-Baden: Noms Verlag, 2017), 36.
 - 93 Rainer Becker, "Sprachliche Kontinuität von Menschenfeindlichkeit: Von der Sprache des Nationalsozialismus bis zur Sprache der gesellschaftlichen Mitte heute," in Freilegungen: Spiegelungen der NS-Verfolgung und ihre Konsequenzen, Jahrbuch des International Tracing Service 4 (2015): 250.
 - 94 Samuel Salzborn, "Von der offenen zur geschlossenen Gesellschaft," 36.
 - 95 Ibid.
 - 96 Lars Rensmann, Demokratie und Judenbild: Antisemitismus in der politischen Kultur der Bundesrepublik Deutschland (Wiesbaden: VS Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften, 2004), 280.
 - 97 Commenter 1: "https://de.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Verbrechen_der_Wehrmacht"; Commenter 2: "<http://www.zukunft-braucht-erinnerung.de/systematische-verbrechen-der-wehrmacht>."
 - 98 Commenter 3: "Für mich ist die Dankbarkeit für die gebrachten Opfer und die Ehrfurcht vor der Tapferkeit unserer Weltkriegssoldaten eine Selbstverständlichkeit."
 - 99 Commenter 4: "Was für ein ekelhaftes Arschloch der braune Greis. Will sich die Vergangenheit nicht mehr vorhalten lassen, weil diese seine Identität nicht prägt, aber stolz auf die 'Leistungen' deutscher Soldaten in beiden Weltkriegen will er dann doch sein dürfen?! Und die anderen Vollidioten jodeln und jubeln wie im Rausch! Die AfD will also endlich auf zwei Angriffskriege, auf über 60 Millionen Tote, auf KZ-Lager, auf tausendfach ermordete Kinder und und und stolz sein dürfen?! Mit Verantwortung, Geschichtsbewusstsein oder Bewusstsein für die Schwere der damaligen Schuld soll man den AfDlern nicht mehr kommen?? Irgendwie widerspricht er sich selbst, nur merkt das vor lauter Stolz weder er noch seine minderbemittelten Fans. Und ganz nebenbei erfährt man auch, dass dieser Haufen sich mehr um Geschichtsverdrehung als um die Gestaltung der Zukunft dieses Landes und aller darin lebenden Menschen kümmern will.. Entlarvend, mal wieder, nur wird es die blindwütigen Fans der braunen Truppe nicht kümmern. Umso wichtiger sind die Vernünftigen und Anständigen."
 - 100 Commenter 5: "Auf solche Soldaten ist Gauland stolz: <https://amp.n-tv.de/.../Die-Plaudereien-der-Wehrmachts-soldaten>. . ."
 - 101 Commenter 6: "Und genau das haben auch die Siegermächte bei unserer 'Befreiung' getan. So viele deutsche Frauen wurden vergewaltigt—von alliierten Soldaten. Über diese Opfer spricht heute keiner, denn böse sind ja nur die Deutschen."